It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

PREFACE TO TWELFTH EDITION.

Collier on Bankruptcy was the pioneer work on the subject, and quickly attained a high position with the bench and bar, a position which it has maintained for twenty-three years, through eleven different editions. The last edition was published over three years ago, during which time there have been over twelve hundred new decisions construing the Bankruptcy Act. The wisdom of continuing the previous policy of the publishers of keeping the work up to date as the leading exponent of the Law of Bankruptcy has caused the preparation of this new edition.

The method of treating the subject in this edition is the same as that employed in previous editions, as the editors are convinced that the arrangement of the book with the Bankruptcy Act itself as the basis for the discussion, is the most practical and desirable form. Frequent additions have been made to the text where justified by the new decisions. It has been found necessary, however, to make only slight changes in the analysis arrangement of the subject matter, and therefore this edition will continue responsive to references made in decisions of the courts to the eleventh edition.

A new feature of this edition is the addition of the new Canadian Bankruptcy Act and General Rules thereunder, which became operative July 1, 1920. This is included as Appendix C, and is fully indexed. Cross references to the Canadian Act have been made under the heading "Analogous Provisions" at the beginning of each section throughout this work, and frequent references to the act have been made in the text.

The index has been re-written to provide for all text changes, and a new table of cases has been prepared. This edition includes cases down to and including page 389 of volume 45 of the American Bankruptcy Reports. Parallel citations have been made to the National Reporter System, but it should be borne in mind that there are numerous decisions by referees which are not reported elsewhere than in the American Bankruptcy Reports.

The editors offer this new edition in the confident hope that it will, like the previous editions, meet with the approval of the profession.

PREFACE TO ELEVENTH EDITION.

Since the last edition of this work was published in 1914, more than two thousand bankruptcy cases have been decided in the Federal and State courts, and two important amendments have been enacted by Congress, materially affecting bankruptcy practice. Many of the cases are of great importance and have tended to dispose, finally, of controverted questions. These facts are sufficient in themselves to justify the publishers of Collier on Bankruptcy in continuing the well-established policy of publishing periodical editions of the work.

The work has been largely rewritten and many parts of it have been rearranged. The general scheme of retaining the sections of the Bankruptcy Act as the basis of the work, placing the discussion or treatise under the several sections, has been so well received by the profession that it has been deemed advisable to retain this method of treatment. The analysis of subject-matter under the section has been made more in detail—many headings having been inserted which were not in former editions. This will obviously make the great mass of the law more available for use.

The notes have been much amplified, by including therein copious extracts from decisions and findings of the courts on important matters. The cases which merely reiterate previous rulings have been cited in their appropriate connection.

The publishers and editor are much gratified at the favorable reception of this book through its numerous editions over a period of nearly twenty years. No other work on the subject has been published so often. Each has met with the approval of bench and bar. It is on this account with pardonable confidence that it is anticipated that this edition will meet the favor of bankruptcy practitioners and others interested in the subject.

The book has been reindexed. The increase in the size is occasioned by the ever-increasing number of bankruptcy cases. This increase may be noted by a comparison of the new table of cases in this edition with those in former editions. This edition includes citations of and quotations from all cases reported in the American Bankruptcy Reports, down to and including volume 38.

FRANK B. GILBERT.

PREFACE TO TENTH EDITION.

The tenth edition of this work brings down to date the former edition, including all the recent reported cases on the subject. Many new and important questions have arisen since the last edition which have been considered and determined, and which must necessarily be treated to make the work complete and comprehensive. The changes in the law of bankruptcy are constant and varied. While the tendency has been toward definiteness, and many former inconsistencies and conflicts in the authorities have been eliminated by authoritative decisions of the United States Supreme Court, new difficulties have appeared which have produced a lack of harmony in the authorities. It has therefore been deemed advisable to continue the policy of publishing periodically a new edition of this work so that the thousands of lawyers and judges who are actively engaged in the consideration of questions arising in bankruptcy law may have constantly available the very latest authoritative expressions upon the subject.

This edition contains all the recent cases on bankruptcy decided by State and Federal courts, and includes citations and quotations from all cases reported in the American Bankruptcy Reports, down to and including volume 31.

JUNE 1, 1914.

FRANK B. GILBERT.

PREFACE TO NINTH EDITION.

It will be noticed, upon an examination of this edition of Collier on Bankruptcy, that the work has been greatly enlarged, and that the entire text and notes have been revised, and a large amount of new matter inserted. In preparing the work the method of treatment used in former editions has been followed. The matter in the text has been classified much more minutely than in former editions. The great volume of the law under the important sections of the Bankruptcy Act has necessitated more careful and complete analysis. The text has been amplified by more extensive discussion of many of the troublesome questions which have arisen to disturb the minds of both lawyer and judge. The notes have been increased in volume and number to give room for digests of cases supporting the text, and extracts of opinions of the courts relative to matters of importance discussed in the text.

Mr. Collier, the learned author of the first edition of this work, clearly stated his reasons for treating the law of bankruptcy as a branch of statutory law. He made the sections of the bankruptcy act the basis for his discussion. Each of the subsequent editors has adopted this method, so that Collier on Bankruptcy is now the only important work on bankruptcy which has so correlated the text of the bankruptcy act with the discussion thereon, as to recognize the principle that the act lies at the foundation of the law and practice in bankruptcy. Without the bankruptcy act there would be no bankruptcy law. The subject cannot be logically and effectually treated by relegating the act to an appendix. We have therefore retained the former arrangement of placing the sections of the act in their consecutive order, completing the discussion under each section, and uniting the related subjects by appropriate cross-references.

Many new forms have been added. The annotations of the General Orders are much more complete than in former editions. The entire work has been revised, increasing the size of the former edition more than one-third. It has been somewhat difficult, under our plan, to compass the subject within one volume. It was thought desirable to accomplish this, even at the expense of making the volume somewhat bulky.

The cases reported in the American Bankruptcy Reports to the end of volume 27, and in Federal Reporter, Volume 194, and in United States Supreme Court Reports, Volume 224, have been cited and discussed.

FRANK B. GILBERT.

ALBANY, N. Y., August 15, 1912.

PREFACE TO EIGHTH EDITION.

The eighth edition of this work is made necessary by the important amendments to the Bankruptcy Act by the Act of June 25, 1910. Nearly two years have elapsed since the publication of the former edition and in that period, about five hundred bankruptcy cases have been reported, many of them very important. The amendments of 1910 were prepared by acknowledged experts in bankruptcy law, for the purpose of settling many disturbing questions, in respect to which a number of controversies had arisen, and of obviating the confusion which had arisen because of divergent views as to the compensation of receivers and trustees. These amendments are far reaching in their effect. They completely nullify many decisions which were controlling in the several jurisdictions. In view of the many changes thus made in the law, the publishers, in furtherance of their policy of keeping this work abreast of the times, could not do otherwise than cause a new edition thereof to be prepared and published.

The cases included in this edition are those contained in the American Bankruptcy Reports, down to and including page 456 of volume 24, together with other cases of even date, not included in that series because not deemed properly within the scope thereof.

FRANK B. GILBERT.

ALBANY, N. Y., October 1, 1910.

PREFACE TO SEVENTH EDITION.

This new edition of Collier on Bankruptcy is published in pursuance of the publishers' policy of keeping the work abreast of the development of the law on the subject. In preparing this edition it has seemed necessary to entirely rewrite a large portion of the text. The method of treatment used in former editions has been followed in this, but the discussion under the several sections of the bankruptcy act has been reclassified and extended. The notes have been made more prominent; many of the new and important cases cited therein being digested and applied to the principles laid down in the text.

In recognition of the fact that the law of bankruptcy is based solely upon the Federal Bankruptcy Act, the several sections of that act have been clearly set forth at the beginning of each chapter. Such sections are cemented together by exhaustive cross references at the end of each section, and in the foot notes. The general orders containing correlative matter are quoted or referred to as the occasion demands. As in former editions, the text of the statute has thus been given its proper place in the work.

It is desirable to call attention to this feature of the work. To the editor's mind it is one of the things which has made this work a success. If it had been thought advisable, the so-called text-book method of treating the subject might have been adopted without additional labor or expense. The experience of lawyers and judges dealing with bankruptcy has shown the importance of keeping the several parts of the statute in their proper relation with the discussion to which they pertain. Every bankruptcy case relates to some particular provision of the Bankruptcy Act. The principle laid down in the case pertains to the application or discussion of such provision. It is not desirable to disassociate the case and the statute. We have therefore continued our former method of treating this important subject, and are firm in the belief that it is what the practitioner wants.

The general orders have been separately treated; all of the cases pertaining thereto having been grouped and considered thereunder. This is a new feature which will prove serviceable. A complete new index has been made covering the entire subject.

The cases included in this edition are those contained in the American Bankruptcy Reports down to and including the first three numbers of volume 21 thereof, together with such English cases and cases arising under the former bankruptcy acts as are applicable.

Much of the valuable matter contained in former editions of this work has been retained. The many important and trustworthy comments upon the law made by Mr. Hotchkiss in the Fourth Edition will still be found in their places, with such elaboration as seems necessary to conform with recent developments in the law.

FRANK B. GILBERT.

ALBANY, May 1, 1909.

PREFACE TO SIXTH EDITION.

Two years have elapsed since the former edition of this work was published. During this time nearly 600 cases involving the interpretation and application of the National Bankruptcy Act have been decided, all of which have been reported in volumes 13 to 16, and in the first three numbers of volume 17 of the American Bankruptcy Reports. Many of these cases conclusively settle disputed questions and are authoritative declarations of important doctrines. The character of these cases has required occasional modifications of the text of the former edition. In many instances new paragraphs and subdivisions have been inserted for the purpose of conforming the text to the trend of the judicial decisions.

The law of bankruptcy is based upon the Federal statute. Explanatory and illustrative cases are cited and commented upon in this edition, as in the former editions, for the purpose of clearly showing what the statute means and how it should be applied. It may be safely assumed that this important subject may not be properly treated in any other way. We have endeavored in this edition to bring before the practitioner first the statute and then the decisions in their legitimate relations without magnifying the importance of the one to the detriment of the other. It is suggested that in so doing the valuable results of former editions have been retained.

The constant and continued use of Collier on Bankruptcy by the courts and the profession, as evidenced by the frequent citations therefrom in the reported decisions, has more than justified a retention of the method of treatment adopted in former editions. All the recent cases are cited in their proper connection and are discussed and commented upon when deemed necessary. The commanding position which this work occupies among text-books upon this subject has brought home to the publishers the necessity of keeping it strictly up to date, and hence this new and revised edition. It is hoped that this edition, like its predecessors, will meet with the approval of the bench and the bar.

FRANK B. GILBERT.

ALBANY, N. Y., April 15, 1907.

PREFACE TO FIFTH EDITION.

The fourth edition of this work was written and published soon after the enactment of the important amendments of 1903 to the bankruptcy act.

Many important cases have been decided and reported during the two years which have elapsed since the publication of the fourth edition, many of them bearing directly upon the effect of the amendments of 1903. These cases have been referred to in their appropriate connection in this new edition. The text of the former edition has been rewritten wherever necessary to conform it to subsequent authorities, and much new matter has been added supplementing and amplifying its many valuable features.

The progress and ever increasing volume of the law of bankruptcy is evidenced by the number of cases reported during the two years intervening between this and the prior edition of this work. These cases run through volumes 9, 10, 11, and 12, and the first number of volume 13 of the American Bankruptcy Reports. All of these cases have been referred to or discussed and considered in this edition of this work. The many valuable notes in these reports are frequently used or referred to.

The number and importance of these cases and their instructive value as interpretations of the amended bankruptcy act of 1903 and the policy adopted by the publishers to keep this work in advance of every other work upon the subject render imperative this new and revised edition.

FRANK B. GILBERT.

ALBANY, N. Y., February 1, 1905.

PREFACE TO FOURTH EDITION.

The death of Mr. Eaton, the author of the third edition, made necessary the choice of a successor. Originally, the writer's purpose was merely to bring Mr. Eaton's edition down to date. The increasing importance of the federal bankruptcy system and the probability of important amendments, early caused the abandonment of that purpose, and the writing of the book anew. The result is a new work. The present author has, however, frequently drawn from his predecessors' conclusions, and gladly records his debt to them.

This rewriting has made possible some changes:

The cases referred to are cited in foot-notes, not in the body of the text, with, it is hoped, such completeness as to make the work a table of cases on the law of bankruptcy, as well as a text-book. The citations are largely to precedents under the present law, but those thought valuable under previous laws are also included. Reference is made, where possible, to both the American Bankruptcy Reports and the Federal Reporter, and, in the court of last resort, to the United States Reports.

Disputed points are not elaborately discussed, the work being intended for the practitioner who is perhaps unfamiliar with this branch of jurisprudence, rather than the student of or expert in it.

Through the "cross-references" at the head of each Section, all analogous provisions in the present law, as well as those in the former laws and the English Bankruptcy Acts of 1883 and 1890, are compacted into a few paragraphs, and the text and the statute thus webbed together. To a General Index, far more complete than in the earlier editions, has been added a system of short indices, called "Synopsis of Sections," at the head of each Section, by running which the investigator may quickly reach the paragraph pertinent to his quest. The General Orders, Official Forms, and Supplementary Forms have also been carefully indexed.

Much more space has been given to practice than in the previous editions, and, for convenience of reference, all paragraphs bearing on it have been indexed by sections under "Practice" in the General Index. The General Orders have also been annotated and criticised and the Official Forms cross-referenced.

A long list of "Supplementary Forms," based on the experience of a referee in bankruptcy and the daily inquiries of the profession, has been added. These, while in no sense official, will, it is hoped, supply precedents for many of the papers needed in a bankruptcy proceeding. Where the Official Forms do not fit the law or the General Orders, new forms are offered as substitutes.

The abstracts of the exemption laws of the States, and the lists of the federal judges and clerks, and of the terms of court in the various districts, have been omitted.

The amendments of 1903 are indicated by italics, matter omitted from the original statute being placed in the foot-notes. The discussion of the amendments, themselves, is made as complete as possible — there being as yet no decisions construing them — and is based largely on the writer's knowledge of the purposes of the framers of the amendatory act and the genesis of the successive bills that resulted in that act.

The preparation of the work has stretched over more than a year, and it has been frequently revised to meet later decisions and changes in the then pending amendatory bill. For its errors in conclusion or statement, the writer asks the indulgence of all who recognize that to err is human. Such as it is, the work voices, doubtless imperfectly, the purpose of one who, recognizing that the bankruptcy system has now come to stay, earnestly desires to make its principles and procedure both clearer to the general practitioner and available even to the layman whose daily round is to give credit and collect his due.

The grateful acknowledgment of the writer is due to Washington A. Russell, Esq., of the Buffalo bar, for his preparation of the Table of Cases and his work in connection with the foot-notes; also to many of his brethren of the referees' courts for suggestions and encouragement.

Nor can the writer forbear to mention in this place the work in behalf of the amendatory bill of The National Association of Credit Men, and especially its tireless and resourceful Secretary, William A. Prendergast, of New York. Without the earnest and early advocacy of the Ray bill by that Association, its passage would have been doubtful, if not impossible. Without immediate remedial legislation, the law itself would have been repealed. This record of appreciation by one who believes that a permanent bankruptcy system is necessary to a credit-giving nation is, therefore, gladly made.

WILLIAM H. HOTCHKISS.

BUFFALO, N. Y., March 16, 1903.

PREFACE TO THIRD EDITION.

In his modest preface to the first edition of this book the author stated that his work was in the nature of a pioneer undertaking intended to "blaze the way" and aid in answering the questions which might arise before adjudications became plentiful. It is pleasant to know that Mr. Collier's scholarly and exhaustive book has not only assisted the practitioner to understand a complicated statute, the subject matter of which is new to most of the present generation, but has also helped greatly in the judicial construction and interpretation of that statute. It is gratifying, too, that the author's answers to many of the numerous questions which he foresaw would arise under this Act have proved to be correct.

In the two and a half years during which the Act has been in force and since the publication of the first edition of this book, most of the sections of the Act have been judicially construed. This fact alone makes a new edition at this time imperative. The bankruptcy decisions, under the law of 1898, have been collated in the present edition and their results set forth in rules of construction. The editor has quoted largely from the more important opinions because he believes that the bar will find it desirable to have the exact language of the court deciding the questions arising under the Act. It is not claimed that the book dispenses with the use of the reported cases but merely that this method guides the practitioner most surely and quickly to an intelligent knowledge of the effect of such decisions and where they may be found. All of Mr. Collier's work which has a permanent and historical value has been retained, while, at the same time, no effort has been spared to make the revision complete and to make the book a thoroughly up-to-date treatise on the principles of the bankruptcy law and guide to bankruptcy practice.

With the hope that this purpose has been fairly realized, the editor submits his work to the kindly indulgence of his professional co-laborers.

JAMES W. EATON.

ALBANY, N. Y., November 17, 1900.

PREFACE TO THE ENLARGED EDITION.

In presenting to the profession and to the public, an enlarged edition of my work on bankruptcy, it is but proper that the character and extent of the additions be explained. In this edition the forms which appeared in the original edition have been superseded by the official forms just promulgated by the Supreme Court; and the rules and orders in bankruptcy prescribed by the same court have been inserted. Not only is the full text of these rules and forms given, but an exhaustive index of them has been made, and they have been annotated and cross-referenced as far as their nature permits. The fact that by rule XXXVII it is provided that in proceedings in equity instituted for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the bankruptcy act, or for enforcing the rights and remedies given by it, the rules of equity practice prescribed by the United States Supreme Court shall be followed, has led me to insert these rules; and a detailed index accompanies them.

A list of the judges of the United States District Courts and of the clerks thereof, and the addresses of the clerks, has been inserted for the convenience of attorneys.

The almost universal tendency on the part of practitioners,—in some cases enforced by local rulings of district courts—to withhold proceedings in bankruptcy until the promulgation of the official rules, has resulted in an almost complete absence of adjudications under the new law. Consequently the enlarged edition contains, besides the additions above mentioned, no changes in the text of the original edition except the correction of a few typographical errors, and the changing of the abstract of the exemption laws of Louisiana to correspond with a new statute of that state recently passed and to go into effect upon January 1, 1899. It is believed, however, that everything affecting the law and practice of bankruptcy is embodied in the book.

The marked favor shown to the work,—the original edition of which was exhausted on the day of issue and of which there have been already four reprints,—is a matter for which the author tenders his sincerest thanks. That the book,—now more full and complete than ever before and embracing, in one volume, the statute itself, the official rules, forms and orders, the exemption laws of all the states, the equity rules, exhaustive comment, and full citation of all authorities now applicable,—may be of further aid to the members of the profession and may assist them in the construction and application of the law and in practice under its provisions, is the wish of

AUBURN, N. Y., November 29, 1898.

PREFACE.

The Law of Bankruptcy is purely statutory both in its origin and in its development. Underneath it lies the one great fundamental principle that when a person's property is insufficient to pay in full all of his creditors, it shall be equitably divided pro rata among them; but there is probably no other principle which can be said to be fixed and permanent and fundamental. Even in England, where there has been a continuous system of bankruptcy for over three hundred years, that system has been developed rather by parliamentary legislation than by judicial decision; while in the United States so infrequent and spasmodic has been the exercise by Congress of its constitutional powers upon the subject that we can hardly claim that bankruptcy is a part of our system of jurisprudence. It has been, in the past, rather in the nature of fragmentary statutory legislation, the various enactments on the subject being separated by intervals of decades, and each presenting important features not appearing in those preceding it, and often the later acts containing provisions which evidenced a different purpose and policy than those of the earlier acts. So entirely unstable and unfixed is bankruptcy as a system of law that under the last two statutes, as will be seen by reference to the notes under section 12 of the present work, the courts have very frequently been called upon to determine what is a bankruptcy law, and what the "subject of bankruptcy" includes. The successive statutes have effected different classes of persons, have materially changed the manner of procedure, have differed radically as to the acts to be regarded as acts of bankruptcy and have at times enlarged and at other times restricted the rights of creditors, or the benefits conferred and the duties imposed upon bankrupts. Not only have there been changes, but the changes have not always tended toward any one end or indicated any fixed purpose. Like all laws of statutory creation the development of the American bankruptcy system has not been harmonious and symmetrical.

The study of bankruptcy, then, is a matter of statutory construction. The law must be considered and applied and enforced as it appears enacted, not as general notions of equity may seem to indicate as proper. The aim of the author of this book has been to study the bankruptcy act of 1898, to analyze its provisions and terms; in fine to ascertain the expressed will and intention of Congress. Following the general principle of the law of construction that each part of a statute or document is to be construed with reference to the whole, each section has been considered in connection with all others on the same or kindred topics, and copious cross-references have been given under the various sections.

But it is not to be denied that the present bankruptcy act, though presenting many points of dissimilarity, is substantially like that passed in 1867, and also bears many resemblances to those passed in 1800 and 1841. The fact has not been overlooked that the adjudicated cases decided under those acts not only shed light on the meaning of terms and provisions of the present act, but that in very many cases they are indisputably clear authorities. In so far as these cases are applicable we have cited them, and for every legal proposition unqualifiedly stated, judicial authority is given. Many of the cases cited are now analogous rather than decisive; but it is believed they sustain the points made. The reader will, of course, bear in mind that when a case is cited upon a given point, it is by us claimed to be applicable or analogous only as to that particular point. Upon other matters, by reason of differences between the present and former acts, it may be entirely inapplicable and incorrect as an exposition of the present law. While an attempt has been made to give all applicable decisions, we have also endeavored to omit all that would mislead and confuse. To show to what extent the cases may still be considered authorities, special pains have been taken to point out the differences between the statutes, and with this aim in view under each section we give the analogous provisions in all the former acts, and as an appendix have inserted, for purposes of comparison, the full text of the act of 1867 with all amendments up to the time of its repeal.

While the authority of decided cases is cited for every legal proposition which is stated without qualification, we have felt that we would fail in properly performing the work undertaken if, because of the lack of adjudicated cases, no study should be given to and no comment made upon the great number of questions which spring up from the new and changed provisions of the act. In considering these we have not, however, always felt called upon to answer them dogmatically; but they have all been discussed and treated, and everything bearing upon them laid fully and fairly before the reader.

We take this opportunity of publicly extending our thanks to H. Noyes Greene, Esq., of the Troy, N. Y., bar, for assistance in preparing the index to this book and the table of cases; also to William H. Hotchkiss, Esq., of Buffalo, N. Y., referee in bankruptcy for Erie county, for his assistance in the preparation of the forms.

In presenting the work to the profession we do so with hesitancy. Of its shortcomings and failings few will be more keenly conscious than ourselves, but we ask that those who use it will bear in mind that the book is in the nature of a pioneer undertaking. It could without question be made more accurate, full and complete if its publication could be delayed until the courts should have construed the provisions of the statute and judicially answered all the questions that might arise, and if then it were made a mere digest of their decisions. But the demand of the bar is for a work that will to some extent, at least, aid them in the solution of the questions that will arise in the early months of practice under the act, before adjudications are plentiful. This task of "blazing the way" is here undertaken, and in proportion to the difficulty of the task we ask the leniency of the critic.

I. CONSTRUCTION AND EFFECT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT.

a. Construction.—The general rules of statutory construction, applicable to all statutes, may be applied to the bankruptcy act. It should at all times be borne in mind that the act is remedial, and must be liberally construed with a view of carrying into effect its obvious purposes and intent.¹ The three fundamental purposes for which the act was enacted are: (1) That a debtor who has been unfortunate, and become unable to pay his debts, might be released therefrom, and be enabled to commence his business life anew, relieved of the burden, provided that he has not been guilty of fraudulent or other improper practices. (2) That, as the condition and price of being so released, he should turn over to his trustee, fully and unqualifiedly, all of his property which was subject to the demands of his creditors. (3) That this property should be applied equitably and ratably to the payment of his various debts.² The courts will at all times adopt the construction which tends to promote equity and equality in the distribution of the bankrupt's estate among his

1. Act is remedial.—The bankruptcy act is remedial and should be construed reasonably and according to the fair import of its terms with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice. Southern Loan & Trust Co. v. Benbow (D. C., N. Car.), 3 Am. B. R. 9, 96 Fed. 514.

In the case of Brown v. Barker, 8 Am. B. R. 450, 453, 68 N. Y. App. Div. 594, 74 N. Y. Supp. 43, the court says: "We may take judicial notice that the present bankruptcy act is the result of a long-continued agitation and discussion, and that it is our duty if possible, to so construe its provisions, liberally if necessary, as to secure the objects for which it was created, rather than by a narrow or technical construction, to defeat them."

See also Botts v. Hammond (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 3 Am. B. R. 775, 99 Fed. 916 (holding that the act is remedial and should be interpreted reasonably and according to the fair import of its terms, with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice); Blake v. Francis-Valentine Co. (D. C., Cal.), 1 Am. B. R. 372, 89 Fed. 691 (citing In re Muller, Fed. Cas. 9,912; Silverman's Case, Fed. Cas. 12,855); In re Scott (D. C., Del.), 11 Am. B. R. 327, 331, 126 Fed. 981; Matter of Murphy Boot and Shoe Co. (D. C., Mass.), 39 Am. B. R. 811, 242 Fed. 991.

The bankruptcy act is remedial and should be interpreted reasonably and according to the fair import of its terms, with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice. In working out the objects of the bankruptcy act, the courts have not indulged in technicalities wherever a liberal procedure was consistent with the substantial rights of the parties in interest. Emerson v. Castor (C. O. A., 6th Cir.), 37 Am. B. R. 719.

2. Brown v. Barker, 8 Am. B. R. 450, 453, 68 N. Y. App. Div. 594, 74 N. Y. Supp. 43.

Objects of act.—There are two principles which lie at the foundation of the bankruptcy act: (1) That the debtor may be discharged from his provable debts; (2) that his collectible assets may be divided equitably and ratably among his creditors. Continental

Nat. Bank v. Katz (Super. Ct., Ill.), 1 Am. B. R. 19; Reid, Murdock & Co. v. Cross, 1 Am. B. R. 34; Matter of Munford (D. C., N. Car.), 43 Am. B. R. 218, 255 Fed. 108.

It is the purpose of the bankruptcy act to convert the assets of the bankrupt into cash for distribution among creditors, and then to relieve the honest debtor from the weight of oppressive indebtedness, and permit him to start afresh free from the obligations and responsibilities consequent upon business misfortunes. Williams v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 236 U. S. 549, 34 Am. B. R. 181.

The proper purposes of the bankruptcy act are: First (and this was its original purpose) to enable creditors to protect themselves by summary process against the frauds of their debtors in evading the payment of their debts; second, to distribute the assets of the debtor equally among his creditors; and, third, to relieve debtors from the burden of debts which, through business misfortune and otherwise, they have incurred and are unable to pay. Leidigh Carriage Co. v. Stengel (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 2 Am. B. R. 383, 95 Fed. 637.

The object of the bankruptcy act is twofold—the benefit of the creditors and the relief of the bankrupt. It is not necessary that both objects shall be attainable in order to warrant proceedings in bankruptcy. In many, perhaps a majority of the cases, the relief to the bankrupt is the only question, for there are no assets to distribute, and in many other cases the benefit and relief of creditors is the only object. MacDonald v. Tefft-Weller Co. (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 11 Am. B. R. 800, 808, 128 Fed. 381.

The equal and equitable distribution of the estates of insolvents and their discharge from the obligation of their debts are the ends sought by proceedings in bankruptcy. Bankruptcy without insolvency, actual or creditors,³ and will protect the unsecured creditors against those who under state laws are given liens or priorities.⁴ But this construction should not minimize the equally important purpose of releasing an honest, unfortunate, and insolvent debtor from the burden of his debts and of his restoration to business activity, in the interest of his family and the general public.⁵ It is the duty of the court to carry into effect both of these purposes to the extent which the language of the act justifies, and to prevent schemes and artifices to avoid the letter and spirit of the law.⁶ The act must be construed, if the language will permit, so as to secure uniformity in the fullest measure, and to avoid an escape of its beneficial purposes by a dishonest tricky debtor.⁷ Where the language of the act is plain and unambiguous it should be given its ordinary meaning; an attempted judicial construction will only lead to doubt and confusion,⁸ but where a provision is ambiguous the court is justified in resorting, for its interpretation, to the official proceedings of Congress at the time of its passage.^{9a} The ultimate determination of the meaning of the provisions of the act rests with the Federal courts, and they are not bound by the interpretation of a State court.⁹ presumed, is almost inconceivable. Bankruptcy without discharge for the honest debtor is a contradiction in terms. In re Forbes (D. C. Mass.), 11 Am. B. R. 787, 790, 128 Fed. 187.

The federal system of bankruptcy is designed not only to distribute the property of the debtor not by law exempted fairly and equally among his creditors, but as a main purpose of the act intends to aid the unfortunate debtor by giving him a fresh start in life, free from debts except of a certain character after the property which he owned at the time of bankruptcy has been administered for the benefit of creditors. Stellwagen v. Clum (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 41 Am. B. R. 1, 245 U. S. 606.

See also Hicks v. Knost (D. C., Ohio), 2 Am. B. R. 153, 155, 94 Fed. 625; Ross v. Saunders (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 5 Am. B. R. 348, 105 Fed. 915; Barton Bros. v. Texas Produce Co. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 14 Am. B. R. 502, 504, 136 Fed. 655; Matter of Jacobs (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 39 Am. B. R. 385, 241 Fed. 620; West v. Empire Life Ins. Co. (D. C., Wash.), 40 Am. B. R. 93, 242 Fed. 605; Matter of McNeil Corporation (D. C., Mass.), 41 Am. B. R. 162, 249 Fed. 765.

3. Distribution of assets.—The proceedings thereunder are equitable and should be conducted on broad lines to accomplish the ultimate purpose of distributing the assets of the estate pro rata among the bankrupt's creditors. In re Faulkner (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 542, citing Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Hurley (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 18 Am. B. R. 896, 82 C. C. A. 453, 153 Fed. 503.

The enforcement of equality among creditors is as well the purpose of the bankruptcy act as the protection of the bankrupt from suits against him for the collection of debts, and in case of doubt as to the proper construction of provisions of the act, it is the duty of the court to adopt that construction which shall seem best adapted to promote that general purpose. In re Adams (Ref., N. Y.), 1 Am. B. R. 95; Utah Assn. v. Boyle Furniture Co. (Utah Sup. Ct.), 39 Utah 518, 31 Am. B. R. 488.

The bankruptcy act includes a large body of remedial legislation. It was designed to relieve unfortunate but honest debtors, and to secure a proper distribution of their assets among their creditors. The latter object is quite as important as the former. In re Scott (D. C. Del.), 11 Am. B. R. 327, 331, 126 Fed. 961.

As to purpose of equal distribution among creditors, see In re Adams & Hoyt Co. (D. C.,

R. 773, 783, 155 Fed. 456 (where the court said: "The main object of the bankrupt act and one of its most beneficial results, was an equal distribution among his creditors of the estate of the bankrupt"); Hurley v. Devlin (D. C., Kans.), 18 Am. B. R. 627, 629, 151 Fed. 910; In re Blount (D. C., Ark.), 16 Am. B. R. 97, 101, 142 Fed. 283; In re Forbes (D. C., Mass.), 11 Am. B. R. 787, 790, 128 Fed. 187; In re Swafford Bros. Dry Goods Co. (D. C., Mo.), 25 Am. B. R. 282, 180 Fed. 549.

A., 7th Cir.), 41 Am. B. R. 314, 249 Fed. 187; McPhee v. United States (Colo. Sup. Ct.), 42 Am. B. R. 346, 174 Pac. 808; Matter of Rosenfeld (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 44 Am. B. R. 390, 262 Fed. 878.

Discharge of bankrupt.—One of the main objects of the bankruptcy act is to protect unfortunate, but honest debtors. Fraudulent debtors are not intended to be protected, nor to escape payment of their just liabilities. In re Harr (D. C., Mo.), 16 Am. B. R. 213, 217, 143 Fed. 421.

The purpose of a voluntary proceeding in bankruptcy is in consideration that the bankrupt promptly surrender all of his nonexempt property to the Bankruptcy Court, to the end that all of his creditors, without preference or priority, may take share and share alike in percentage of the property thus surrendered; then the bankrupt is given an acquittance of such percentages of his debts not thus paid, and may commence his business life anew. Baylor v. Rawlings (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 28 Am. B. R. 773, 200 Fed. 131.

b. Effect on State legislation.—The uniformity of the act throughout all the States is one of its essential features. The act applies alike in all the States and effectively nullifies all State laws which are in conflict with its terms.¹⁰ It follows that all such laws having for their purpose the disposition of the affairs of an insolvent debtor must yield to the paramount force of the bankruptcy act when the creditors invoke its aid.¹¹

c. Requirement as to uniformity.—It is not the purpose to discuss at this point the constitutionality of specific provisions of the bankruptcy act. Numerous cases have arisen where the validity of such provisions has been considered. Such cases will be cited and discussed under appropriate sections.¹² The United States constitution provides that Congress shall have power to establish "uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States."¹³ The provision confers comprehensive power on Congress to legislate upon this subject, and constitutes a relinquishment of all control thereof on the part of the States. The States, on surrendering such control, did so only if Congress chose to exercise it, and until this was done State laws were effective except so far as they transgressed the constitutional restriction that laws should not be passed "impairing the obligations of contracts."¹⁴ The uniformity required in the enactment of bankruptcy acts is geographical and not personal, that is they must extend throughout all the States, and it has been held that the present system is, in a constitutional sense, uniform since under it the trustee takes in each State for distribution among creditors whatever would have been available to such creditors, if the bankruptcy act had not been passed.¹⁵ The act does not lack uniformity because of its recognition of State laws pertaining to exemptions, dower rights and priorities of payment.¹⁶ Nor because it makes a distinction between bankruptcies of individuals and corporations.¹⁷

d. Suspension of State insolvency laws.—(1) IN GENERAL.—No bankruptcy law since that of 1800 has contained any provision declaring the effect of such a law on analogous State laws. That law, § 61, provided as follows: "This act shall not repeal or annul, or be construed to repeal or annul, the laws of any State now in force, or which may be hereafter enacted, for the relief of insolvent debtors, except so far as the same may affect persons who are or may be within the purview of this act." So far as it goes, the clause quoted is doubtless still the law. There was no need to insert it in the subsequent statutes, for ere the act of 1841 was passed, the Supreme Court had delivered two epoch-making decisions, which settled the law on the subject: (1) that, when Congress has exercised its constitutional power to enact a uniform bankruptcy law, all existing State insolvency laws applying to the same persons are suspended,¹⁸ but (2) that, this power not being exclusive, State laws are valid and continue operative so far as they do not conflict with the paramount Federal law.¹⁹ The prevailing rule seems to be that the operation of all laws enacted for the purpose of settling or winding up the estates and affairs of insolvent debtors, is suspended to the extent that the provisions thereof are conflicting.²⁰

(2) WHAT ARE INSOLVENCY LAWS.—It is not always easy to determine what laws are insolvency laws. There is some conflict among the authorities as to the operation of such laws, and as to whether or not proceedings thereunder may be instituted in State courts.²¹

It is obvious, however, that if a State law covers the same field as the bankruptcy act having for its purpose the relief of an insolvent debtor, by the distribution of his estate equally among his creditors, and his subsequent release from his debts, it is suspended, in toto, and no relief may be had thereunder.²² Laws regulating general assignments,²³ or invalidating transfers in contemplation of insolvency with intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors,^{23a} not being to such assignee or additional assignees as may be selected at a meeting of creditors required to be called for that purpose, and which makes provision for the discharge of the insolvent from liabilities to those creditors making claims to their share in the assets, except in respect to claims arising in certain cases, such as fraud, embezzlement, and for false oaths in reference to the settlement of the estate, is in the nature of a bankruptcy act. *Closser v. insolvency laws, are not suspended. Likewise as to laws concerning the punishment of fraudulent debtors,²⁴ or for the settlement of the estates of deceased insolvents.²⁵ Nor does the existence of a Federal law preclude the passage of a State insolvency law; the latter merely remains inoperative while the former is in force.²⁶ A State statute relating to insolvency and providing for proceedings having the same object as the bankrupt act is absolutely inoperative as to the persons and property to which the bankrupt act applies.²⁷ The discharge feature seems not necessarily a part of an insolvency law, and State laws lacking it have been held suspended by a national bankruptcy law.²⁸

(3) PARTIAL SUSPENSION; EXCEPTED CLASSES.—State laws may be suspended in part only, as where they refer to a class expressly excepted by the bankruptcy law, in which case they continue operative as to that class.²⁹ Thus a State law under which persons engaged chiefly in the tillage of the soil may be proceeded against by their creditors for the purpose of throwing them into bankruptcy has been held not to be superseded by the bankruptcy act.³⁰ But a farmer is not deprived of the privilege of voluntary bankruptcy under the bankruptcy act, hence as to him a State act providing for voluntary bankruptcy is suspended.³¹ The exception relieving farmers, wage earners, and debtors owning less than $1,000 from involuntary proceedings against them, leaves the way clear to creditors to proceed against them under State laws, if provision is made therefor.³²

Cases either expressly or by plain implication holding a contrary doctrine include Old Town Bank v. McCormick, 96 Md. 341, 351, 10 Am. B. R. 767, 53 Atl. 934, 60 L. R. A. 577, 94 Am. The Maryland case above cited contains the most satisfactory and convincing discussion of the subject which has come under our notice, and with most of its reasoning we heartily concur.

It is undoubted law that the federal act does not suspend the operation of State laws in so far as the latter affect classes of persons who are expressly excepted from the operation of its provisions, or which those provisions do not reach. Such classes include municipal, railroad, insurance, and banking corporations which the act expressly excepts. Sturges v. Crownshield, 4 Wheat. 122, 195, 4 L. Ed. 529; *Herron Co. v. (4) DISSOLUTION OF INSOLVENT CORPORATIONS.—As to the effect of the bankruptcy act on a State law regulating the distribution of the assets of insolvent corporations there is much conflict. The weight of authority under the act of 1867 was that they were suspended.³³ It would seem that, if the proceeding be purely one of distribution and the corporation be amenable to bankruptcy under § 4 of the present law, the State law would be suspended; otherwise, not.³⁴ As stated by Chief Justice Fuller: "The operation of the bankruptcy laws of the United States cannot be defeated by insolvent commercial corporations applying to be wound up under State statutes. The bankruptcy law is paramount, and the jurisdiction of the Federal courts in bankruptcy, when properly invoked in the administration of the affairs of insolvent persons and corporations, is essentially exclusive."³⁵

II. TERMS DEFINED IN GENERAL.

The definitions of the words and phrases contained in this section are to be used in construing the several provisions of the bankruptcy act and are to be applied when such words and phrases are used in proceedings under such act. Such definitions are controlling in the construction of the act unless the same be inconsistent with the context of the provision where the word or phrase is found. Several of these definitions are important. They often determine the scope and effect of the provision of the section in which they are found. In many instances, the definitions indicate wide departures from

Equally and for the same reasons, it must be true that whatever classes of cases are either expressly excepted from the operation of the Bankruptcy Act or lie outside of the reach of its provisions are left subject to State regulation. Such classes of cases and the conditions and situations which produce them are not within the field covered by the federal act, and legislative provisions concerning them by the States cannot be said to be in conflict in any way with the federal legislation. The power and jurisdiction of the States in the field of insolvency regulation is full and complete, except as federal legislation may invade and thereby limit it; and it is limited by such legislation only to the extent of that invasion. Wherever the field is not thus restricted, it must follow as a logical consequence that the power of the States remains. The field of restriction certainly cannot be broader than that of the operation of the federal statute. In other words, the test to be applied in determining whether or not the federal act suspends State laws is not one based upon a classification of persons, but upon a less arbitrary and more logical and just classification of cases, situations, and conditions in so far at least as they fall into clearly defined groups. Otherwise some portion of the proper field of bankruptcy and insolvency legislation is quite likely to remain unoccupied. Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 122, 195, 4 L. Ed. 529; Ex parte Eames, 2 Story, 322, 326, Fed. Cas. No. 4237; Singer v. Nat. Bedstead Co., 11 Am. B. R. 276, 65 N. J. Eq. 290, 294, 55 Atl. 868; Herron v. Superior Court, 8

R. 66, 112 Fed. 323, 331. The conclusion of the court was that, "We are of the opinion that Congress did not intend to bring the situation, created by the unwillingness of insolvent farmers, wage-earners, and small debtors to submit themselves of their own volition to the jurisdiction of the federal bankruptcy courts for the equal distribution of their estates among their creditors, within the purview of the Bankruptcy Act, or to cover the field created by that condition not unlikely to arise, and that the provisions of our State legislation regulating such situations and conditions are therefore not suspended and rendered inoperative by reason of the existence of the Bankruptcy Act."

the ordinary meanings of the words. It will be found essential to refer constantly to the definitions here set forth, and the careful practitioner will familiarize himself at the outset, with the peculiar nomenclature of the law. It will be noted that some of the definitions in this section read "shall mean," while others read "shall include." It was not intended that definitions of words used in the act which read "shall include" should exclude other meanings or definitions of the word or limit the ordinary and well-understood meanings. It was intended to make sure that the words defined would be held to include what is expressed.³⁶ It will not be necessary to consider in this place all of the words and phrases here defined but reference will be made to them from time to time in connection with the discussion of the appropriate subject matter. It may be well, however, to briefly consider a few of the definitions, which, in their nature, are fundamental.³⁷

III. STATUTORY DEFINITIONS.

a. Adjudication.—It will be observed that "adjudication" is defined in subd. (2) of this section for the purpose of determining the time when the adjudication takes effect. It is not in this sense a definition. The definition indicates on its face that the adjudication is to be by decree, which should be executed as prescribed in Forms in Bankruptcy Nos. 11 or 12.³⁸ The effect of adjudication or dismissal is considered under § 18, post.³⁹ If there is no appeal from the decree adjudicating the defendant a bankrupt, it dates from the rendition of the decree, and if there is an appeal, and it is finally confirmed, the adjudication dates from the confirmation. If an appeal is taken and it is dismissed, the date of adjudication is not changed from the time it is made to the time of dismissal; such dismissal is not a final confirmation.⁴⁰

b. Courts; courts of bankruptcy.—It is provided by subd. (7) of this section that where the term "courts" is used it shall mean the court of bankruptcy in which the proceedings are pending, and may include the referee. "Courts" and "Courts of bankruptcy" are frequently used with the same meaning. The latter term is evidently defined for the purpose of specifying what courts are courts of bankruptcy. Referees do not possess all the jurisdiction of courts of bankruptcy. Their jurisdiction is limited to the matters specially prescribed⁴¹ and to such matters as may be inferred to fall within the jurisdiction expressly granted by statute. Although "courts" may include the referees under the definition, it is not intended to confer upon them such jurisdiction as is possessed by courts of bankruptcy.⁴²

36. Opinion of Judge Ray in In re Harper (D. C., N. Y.), 23 Am. B. R. 918, 931, 175 Fed. 412.

37. The act of 1867 contained no definitions. Section 48 of that act explains that "person" included "corporation" and "oath" included "affirmation" and indicated that the singular included the plural and the like. The English bankruptcy act of 1883, § 168, defines expressly many of the terms used in that act, and our present bankruptcy act follows the English act in this respect.

c. Creditor.—This term includes any person who owns a provable debt, demand, or claim against the bankrupt, and may include his duly authorized agent, attorney, or proxy. The determination of the question as to the provability of debts or claims depends upon the statute and must be made as therein provided. The fact that a creditor has not actually proved his claim does not render him any the less a creditor of the bankrupt.^{42a} It has been contended that an indorser or surety is not a creditor within the meaning of the act; but this contention is untenable.⁴³ A surety, or indorser or other person secondarily liable for the bankrupt has a provable claim against the bankrupt estate, in a case where the principal claim is provable.⁴⁴ The mere fact that plaintiffs have brought suit on a claim, pending at the time of bankruptcy, does not justify a finding that they "owned a demand or claim provable in bankruptcy," and are therefore creditors.⁴⁵ In the usual arrangement made between a broker and his customer for the purchase of stock, the broker never owns the stock purchased; the stock belongs to the customer, and he does not become a creditor of the broker, for the amount which he has paid to the broker for the purchase of the stock.⁴⁶ One who subscribes for stock in a corporation and pays the agreed amount under an agreement that the corporation shall issue fully paid stock for twice the amount of the subscription and in case of a failure on the part of the corporation to issue said stock the amount subscribed shall be a loan, if the corporation fails to issue the stock, the subscriber remains a creditor.⁴⁷

d. Debt.—Debt means a provable debt; any debt, demand, or claim provable in bankruptcy. A debt is provable if it is susceptible of proof.⁴⁸ A debt may be provable and within the definition although not proved within the time limit,⁴⁹ that is, if it is one of those debts which may be proved under § 63 of the act.⁵⁰ The intent of the law is to make every demand, which may be enforced against the bankrupt either at law or in equity, provable in bankruptcy,⁵¹ provided, of course, such demand is one which, by the terms of the act, does not fall without the classification of provable debts.⁵² While the unmatured liability of a bankrupt as an indorser, surety, or guarantor may not be a "debt" in a technical sense, it is a "demand" or "claim," and falls within the definition.⁵³ A debt is provable whether due or not at the time of the bankruptcy.⁵⁴ The definition does not include contingent claims under executory contracts which have not accrued at the time of the institution of the proceedings.⁵⁵ Taxes due are not, in a strict sense, debts, but being claims against the bankrupt or his estate, they fall within the definition.⁵⁶ They are payable by the trustee although not required to be proved like other debts.⁵⁷ Interest accruing after the institution of the proceedings should not be included as a part of the debt.⁵⁸

e. Insolvency.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Insolvency is defined in subdivision 15 of this section. In all foreign bankruptcy laws, cessation of payments is the essential of insolvency.⁵⁹ Until the passage of the present law, it was the test in the United States. Under the bankruptcy act of 1867 a debtor was deemed insolvent when he was unable to pay his debts in the ordinary course of business as they matured.⁶⁰ It was held under that act that "the amount of the trader's property was of no consequence if he was unable to pay his debts in lawful money as they matured."⁶¹ Under the law of 1898, the value of the property is the essential element.⁶² When applied to proceedings for the appointment of a receiver the definition of insolvency should be strictly construed.⁶³ The definition controls as against a finding of insolvency in a State court based upon facts contained in the record of a proceeding for the appointment of a receiver of a corporation.⁶⁴ The definition of insolvency contained in this section has been much criticised. It evidently has rendered

tion is called to the fact that the act of 1898 has given an artificial meaning to the word 'insolvent,' thereby complicating very much the construction of the statute as applied to alleged preferences, and rendering to a large extent inapplicable the decisions of courts of authority on statutes where the word 'insolvency' is to be read in its ordinary business sense." In the case of Marvin v. Anderson, 6 Am. B. R. 520, 111 Wis. 387, 87 N. W. 226, a distinction was made between the meaning of the term "insolvency," as the subject of insolvency is dealt with by insolvent and bankrupt laws, and the general meaning thereof. The former was said to be the inability of a person to pay his debts as they mature in the ordinary course of business; the latter, a substantial excess of a person's liabilities over the fair cash value of his property. 5 Cyc. 237, note 1. See, also, in this connection, Grunsfeld v. Brownell, 11 Am. B. R. 509, 601, 12 New Mex. 192, 76 Pac. 310; Hicks Co., Ltd. v. Moore (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 44 Am. B. R. 384, 261 Fed. 773.

What constitutes insolvency.—Insolvency means something more than that the debtor was financially embarrassed and hard pressed by his creditors. Matter of Salmon (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 41 Am. B. R. 45, 249 Fed. 300. A debtor is insolvent where, within four months of the filing of his petition in bankruptcy, the aggregate of his property at a fair valuation is insufficient to pay his debts. inapplicable the decisions of courts of authority on statutes where the word "insolvency" is to be read in its ordinary business sense.⁶⁵ It is undoubtedly humane, but is thought to put creditors at their debtor's mercy. On the other hand, it protects the debtor whose property is not quickly convertible. In this aspect, it results in conditions not unlike those of a debtor who has taken advantage of the suspended payment periods sanctioned by some of the continental bankruptcy systems. In actual practice it has done little harm.⁶⁶ In any event the definition of insolvency as prescribed by the statute must be strictly adhered to.⁶⁷

(2) PROPERTY TO BE INCLUDED.—The property to be valued may include all assets having a value belonging to the person alleged to be a bankrupt, but under the definition any property which is disposed of with intent to defraud, hinder or delay creditors, is to be excluded. The statute thus contemplates that a bankrupt shall not have the benefit of the valuation of property transferred by him in fraud of creditors, in determining whether he is insolvent.⁶⁸ The property to be excluded is that which is actually disposed of by the transfer in fraud of creditors, so that where a mortgage is given which is tainted with bad faith, the equity of redemption should be counted in.⁶⁹ Property transferred in fraud of creditors, and which can only be reached through litigation cannot be considered property of the bankrupt upon the question of solvency or insolvency.⁷⁰ Where property is transferred in payment of, or as security for a just debt, the mere fact that it may involve a preference in bankruptcy should bankruptcy proceedings be instituted, does not exclude it from consideration in determining the debtor's solvency.⁷¹ Under the definition property which is concealed with intent to defraud is not to be valued in determining the solvency of the debtor. Where a man receives money which should have been applied to the payment of his debts, refuses to state where it was kept, but insists that it has been invested by him without the jurisdiction of the court he may be said to have "concealed" it, within the meaning of this clause, and it is to be excluded.⁷² The definition does not exclude exempt property and such property should therefore be valued in determining the question of the alleged bankrupt's insolvency.⁷³ Only such assets should be included as may be realized on by a creditor if he obtained judgment against the owner in the ordinary course of judicial procedure.⁷⁴

(3) FAIR VALUATION OF PROPERTY.—Insolvency turns on what is a "fair valuation" of the property.⁷⁵ Under this definition it is not necessary to show solvency that the bankrupt was able to realize from his property at the time of an alleged preference or unlawful transfer, a sufficient sum to pay his debts; but if at the time a fair valuation of his property is sufficient to pay his debts, he is solvent.⁷⁶ Fair valuation has been held to be the present market value, and not the amount which he might realize from a forced sale of his property.⁷⁷ The fair "market value" of assets is that value

144 Pac. 673; In re Baumann (D. C., Tenn.), 3 Am. B. R. 196, 96 Fed. 946, in which case the court said: "If Congress had intended to exclude from the terms of this definition property exempted by law either explicitly or by necessary implication, . . . it might have been best for Congress to have made that exception, but it is neither absurd nor in any sense unwise that it should, in furtherance of its determination to give us a fixed rule, have made no exception at all. Again, the statute does in fact contain in its language one particular exception and it contains no more. If another exception had been intended it would have been expressed along with that which was significantly declared."

Exempt as well as non-exempt property must be included. In re Crenshaw (D. C., Ala.), 19 Am. B. R. 502, 156 Fed. 638. See, also, In re Rome Planing Mill Co. (D. C.), 3 Am. B. R. 766, 99 Fed. 937.

The Ray amendatory bill of 1903 sought to insert words which would have excluded exempt property from the aggregate of a debtor's assets in determining whether he was insolvent, but the Senate, unfortunately, struck out the provision.

The definition of what constitutes "insolvency" contained in section 1, subd. 15, does not control in determining whether a debtor was insolvent so as to make a voluntary conveyance fraudulent under the laws of Minnesota. Hence the exempt property of the debtor is not to be considered in determining the value of the assets retained. Nor is a debt that is amply secured by mortgage on the property conveyed to be included in determining whether the debtor has retained assets amply sufficient to satisfy existing claims. Underleak v. Scott (Minn. Sup. Ct.), 28 Am. B. R. 926, 134 N. W. 731.

74. In considering assets in relation to liabilities, in order to determine the solvency of an alleged bankrupt, the assets ought to be such as a creditor could realize on if he obtained a judgment against him in the ordinary course of judicial procedure; and where an alleged bankrupt, who has confessed judgment and mortgaged his property, holds accounts for goods sold on the installment plan to people who have no assets except their salaries and are execution proof, though they are doubtless honest and may eventually pay their debts in full, such accounts will not be considered in estimating his resources. Louisiana Nat. Life Assur. Soc. v. Segen (D. C., La.), 28 Am. B. R. 19, 196 Fed. 903.

Fair valuation.—In the case of In re Hines (D. C., Or.), 16 B. R. 295, 144 Fed. 142, the court said, in considering what constitutes a fair valuation: "As it respects property considered in a commercial sense, I can conceive of no better or surer standard by which to arrive at a fair valuation than the market valuation; that is, what the property will probably bring, or is worth, in the general market to-day, where everybody buys. It could not be what it is worth to one person or to another under special circumstances, or having special use for a particular article, but what it is worth as a marketable commodity at a given time with no special conditions prevailing other than affect the market generally in the locality where the commodity is for sale." As bearing upon the question of insolvency, the value of the property may be shown by evidence of what it sold for at private sale by the receiver of the alleged bankrupt appointed in the State court (In re Bloch [C. C. A., 2d Cir.], 6 Am. B. R. 300, 109 Fed. 790), but not what the property brought at an auction sale by the trustee. Rutland Co. Nat. Bank v. Graves (D. C., Vt.), 19 Am. B. R. 146, 156 Fed. 168.

"Fair valuation," as used in the definition, means the fair cash value or the fair market value of the property as between one who wants to purchase and one who wants to sell the property. If the bankrupt had wanted to sell its property, the price it could have obtained for it upon the market from parties who wanted to buy and would give

which the debtor himself might have realized thereon if permitted to continue in business.⁷⁸ The value of the property as a part of the bankrupt's business as a "going concern" should be considered rather than the value after bankruptcy has intervened, and the property has ceased to be productive.⁷⁹ Mortgages held by an alleged insolvent bank should be taken at the value which can be realized thereon by the bank as a "going" bank and not at that which might be obtained by treating them as quick assets, such as commercial bonds and the like.⁸⁰ The actual value and not the face value of commercial paper, accounts and the like must govern.⁸¹ This value should be determined as of the time the proceedings were commenced.⁸² Where the act of bankruptcy itself depreciates the debtor's property until, under this definition, he is insolvent, the petition against the alleged bankrupt must be dismissed.⁸³ Manifestly, a person may not be able to meet current obligations, and yet his property at a fair valuation may be sufficient to pay his debts.⁸⁴

its fair value, is the "fair valuation" which the statute refers to. The price which the property would bring or does bring when forced off at auction, cannot be regarded as always fixing its fair market value. Grandison v. National Bank of Commerce, (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 36 Am. B. R. 438, 231 Fed. 800.

Determination of valuation.—In the case of Steen v. Paper (D. C., No. Dak.), 25 Am. B. R. 451, 183 Fed. 228, the court said: "'Fair valuation,' within the meaning of subdivision 15 of section 1 of the Bankruptcy Act, means a value that can be made promptly effective by the owner of property 'to pay his debts.' That is the language of this liberal statute. It ought not to be enlarged. Such a value excludes, on the one hand, the sacrifice price that would result from an execution or foreclosure sale, and, on the other hand, the retail price that could be realized in the slow process of trade. This latter value should be excluded because it could only be gained by large expense and the many risks of a mercantile venture. 'Fair valuation' means such a price as a capable and diligent business man could presently obtain for the property after conferring with those accustomed to buy such property. Such a value will depend upon many circumstances, such as the age and condition of the stock, the season of the year, and the state of trade."

Market value, frequently used as a standard of "fair valuation" must be assumed to depend on whether a market exists or can be created by an attempt to sell the property, and expert opinion of market value must necessarily be intended to fix the value which the property ought to give as a fair return, if sold to some one who is willing to purchase under the ordinary selling conditions. A valuation based only upon what may be obtained at a forced sale or an auction sale, or which may be realized under some accidental or unusual situation cannot be taken as the "fair valuation" of property to a going concern. Matter of Kobre et al (D. (4) EVIDENCE.—Insolvency owing to its nature, is not always susceptible of direct proof. It may, and in many cases must, be established by the proof of other facts, from which the ultimate fact of insolvency may be presumed or inferred.^{84a} Evidence must be adduced sufficient to show that the alleged bankrupt's debts were more than the value of his assets at the time the petition is filed.⁸⁵ The books of a bankrupt, his schedules, inventory and appraisal are competent evidence upon the question of insolvency.⁸⁶ The question of insolvency is one of fact and not of law, and is determinable as such.⁸⁷

f. Conceal.—The word "conceal" under the present law, means more than "hide;" it connotes more than "secrete." Thus, with peculiar reference to the second objection to a discharge,⁸⁸ it includes the falsifying or mutilating of books or business records.^{88a} Under the former law, concealment of property included a concealment of title to property.⁸⁹ The new definition strengthens rather than impairs this doctrine. It may be doubted, however, whether the definition adds anything to the ordinary meaning of the word "concealed" in § 29-b; the difficulty of reading in either "falsified" or "mutilated" will be apparent at a glance. Almost as difficult would be the interpolation of these new meanings into the first act of bankruptcy.⁹⁰ This definition has frequently been considered by the courts,⁹¹ in connection especially with the concealment of the bankrupt's property as an indictable offense,⁹² or as a ground for the withholding of a discharge.⁹³

g. Secured creditor.—This term is defined in subdivision 23 of this section. Under this definition a creditor, to be secured, must either (a) hold security against the property of the bankrupt, or (b) be secured by the individual obligation of another who holds such a security. This definition thus restricts the popular meaning.⁹⁴ If the security is the property of another, or if it is exempt property, that is, if it is not assignable under the bankruptcy act, the person holding the same is not a secured creditor within this definition.⁹⁵

Overdrafts at a bank do not show insolvency. The arranging to cover overdrafts by bank drafts and checks is not in itself sufficient to create even a suspicion of insolvency as the term is used in the act. McDonald v. Clearwater Ry. Co. (D. C., Ida.), 21 Am. B. R. 182, 190, 164 Fed. 1007.

Liability as surety or indorser, where principal solvent.—The liability of an alleged bankrupt as surety or indorser, if the principal is solvent and abundantly able to pay, should not be counted against him on the question of his solvency or insolvency, because, if called on to pay such debt, he would immediately have an asset which would be equal to the amount he would be required to pay. Matter of Bowers (D. C., Ga.), 33 Am. B. R. 51, 215 Fed. 617.

Liability to sub-agents.—In determining whether an alleged bankrupt's liabilities are in excess of his assets it is proper to schedule as liabilities deposits made with him by sub-agents which he, as agent of a petitioning creditor, has not returned to the sub-agents or transferred to his principal. Matter of Burg (D. Where an indictment under § 29-b uses the words "unlawfully, knowingly and fraudulently" to characterize the word "conceal" it is not necessary to specify whether the concealment consists of secreting, falsifying and mutilating, simply because the word "conceal" as defined in this section, includes "to secrete, falsify and mutilate." United States v. Comstock (Cir. Ct., Mass.), 20 Am. B. R. 520, 162 Fed. 416.

The English definition, "a person holding a mortgage, charge or lien on the property of the debtor, or any part thereof, for a debt due to him from the debtor,"⁹⁶ is even more restrictive than is ours. Thus, in both systems, creditors may often be secured and yet not be secured creditors.⁹⁷

h. Transfer.—This term is defined in subdivision 25 of this section. The word has most comprehensive meaning in the bankruptcy law. It includes every method of disposing of or parting with property or its possession; thus doubtless comprising within itself even the idea commonly expressed by "conceal." Its enlarged meaning has already been extensively discussed by the courts. A payment of money, even in due course of business, is a transfer.⁹⁸ Transfer includes a chattel mortgage,⁹⁹ as well as any other lien or Assignability of homestead.—In the case of Fenley v. Poor (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 10 Am. B. R. 377, 121 Fed. 739, it was held that the real estate in which the bankrupt may have a homestead passes to his trustee, and the holder of a mortgage thereon is a "secured creditor." The court said: "But the definition in the bankruptcy act refers to the nature of the property, and, if it is such as to be assignable under the act, the fact that it includes exemptions under the State laws in force at the time of the filing of the petition could not affect its nature and make it non-assignable. The act provides that the bankrupt shall make claim under oath to his exemptions, and file the same in triplicate, and also makes it the duty of the trustee to set apart the bankrupt's exemptions and report the estimated value to the court, and makes it the duty of the judge to determine all claims of bankrupts to their exemptions. These provisions clearly indicate that the whole estate of the bankrupt is assigned, under the law, to the trustee, and that then the claim of the bankrupt is to be made for his exemptions which are to be set apart by the trustee and determined by the court. The fact that the debtor has a homestead right in a tract of land does not change the nature of the property and make it non-assignable." Citing In re Sisler (D. C.), 2 Am. B. R. 700, 96 Fed. 402. All technicality and narrowness of meaning is precluded; the word is used in its most comprehensive sense, and is intended to include every means and manner by which property can pass from the ownership and possession of another and by which the result forbidden by the statute may be accomplished,—a preference enabling a creditor to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than any other creditor of the same class." Matter of Muir (D. Payment of money.—It was settled in the Carson case supra, that money is "property" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and that a payment of money is a "transfer." *West v. ⁹⁹ Matter of Riggs Restaurant Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 11 Am. B. R. 508, 130 Fed. 691. This case was decided under the New York statute and the case of Butler v. Miller, 1 N. Y. 500, was cited, in which the court said: "A personal mortgage is more mortgage voluntarily created by the debtor.¹⁰⁰ It includes orders drawn by the bankrupt, which operate as assignments of the funds upon which they are drawn.¹⁰¹ It is not, however, sufficiently broad to include a preferential payment to a creditor within the meaning of the term "transferred" so as to bar a discharge under § 14-b (4), in the absence of a fraudulent intent.¹⁰² The performance of labor by a debtor for a creditor does not constitute a "transfer of property."¹⁰³ Nor does a "transfer" include a bailment; it was only intended to apply to cases where from the nature of the contract, the title to the property has become vested in the bankrupt to such an extent as to render it his property, and as such liable for the payment of his debts.¹⁰⁴ The words "as a payment, pledge, mortgage, gift or security," as used in this definition are illustrative merely, and do not so qualify the meaning of the term as to permit a transfer by any other method.¹⁰⁵ In § 67-e, "transfer" seems to be used as something different from "conveyance," "assignment" and "encumbrance," though the better opinion is that this was an inadvertence in the drafting of the law, and that even here the general word includes those that are specific. This definition becomes important in §§ 3-a (1) (2) and b (1), 57-g, 60-a, 67-e, four of the leading sections of the law. Its significance to a proper understanding of the statute cannot be too much emphasized.

i. Wage-earner.—This term is defined in subdivision 27 of this section. Cases interpreting this definition are already numerous. A traveling salesman was held not to be a wage-earner;¹⁰⁶ yet, under the meaning of the word, as used in local statutes, may be.¹⁰⁷ But he is not within the definition if he receives a salary of $100 per month, and his board and lodging which were worth $40 per month to him.¹⁰⁸ The doubt as to this question led to the amendment of § 64-b (4) by the act of 1906, giving traveling salesmen the same priority as other wage-earners.¹⁰⁹ A bookkeeper working for a stated than a mere security. It is a sale of the thing mortgaged and operates as a transfer of the whole legal title to the mortgage, subject only to be defeated by the full performance of the condition."

A voluntary confession of a judgment in favor of certain of the creditors of any insolvent is a transfer. In re Nasbaum (D. C., N. Y.), 18 Am. B. R. 598, 152 Fed. 835; Grant v. National Bank of Auburn (D. C., N. Y.), 28 Am. B. R. 712, 197 Fed. 581. Effect on priorities under § 64b(4).—The salary when the act of bankruptcy was committed is a wage-earner.¹¹⁰ A teamster working with his team for day wages hauling logs and performing other similar services is a wage-earner.¹¹¹ A person who acts as the agent or representative of another in conducting the business of such other, but who has no interest therein, and is paid a salary or wage for his services is a wage-earner.¹¹² But a music teacher giving music lessons at a certain sum an hour is not.¹¹³ Nor is a married woman a wage-earner who lives at home and performs the ordinary domestic duties of a married woman, but at certain times during the year, when not otherwise engaged at home, performs services for others than the members of her own family.¹¹⁴ The definition resolves itself into what constitutes working for salary or hire, and, in the end, to the rulings of the State courts on analogous provisions in State laws.¹¹⁵ The importance of this definition is found in the fact that wage-earners cannot be petitioned against,¹¹⁶ and are entitled to priority of payment for a limited period of labor prior to the bankruptcy.¹¹⁷ All of these matters will be taken up and discussed at length in their proper connection.

IV. JUDICIAL DEFINITIONS.

a. Preferences.—Though this word is not defined in this section, the supreme court has held that § 60-a is a definition.¹¹⁷ A preference under this law has then but three elements: (a) insolvency, (b) the procuring or suffering of a judgment or the making of a transfer by the bankrupt, (c) a consequent inequality between creditors of the same class.¹¹⁸ A voidable preference is something very different.¹¹⁹ It follows, also, that only transfers and judgments can be preferences. The English law continues to distinguish between mere preferences and those that are either "fraudulent"¹²⁰ or "undue." The result of our new meaning to an oldtime word has been far-reaching.¹²¹ definition does not refer to or limit section 64b(4) giving priority to wages due to workmen, clerks, traveling or city salesmen, or servants, earned within three months; but was intended only to define the phrase "wage-earner" in any provision of the Bankruptcy Act or proceeding relating thereto in which the word may be found, and especially section 4b, which provides that any person, excepting a wage-earner or a person engaged chiefly in farming or the tillage of the soil, etc., may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. Blessing v. Blanchard (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 35 Am. B. R. 125, 213 Fed. 35.

114. Matter of Remaley (Ref., Pa.), 23 Am. B. R. 29, in which case it was declared that the test in determining whether a person is a wage-earner is: Does the person claiming to be a wage earner depend, first and foremost, upon the return from his personal service for his maintenance and support?

The definition of "wage-earner," contained in section 1 (27) of the Bankruptcy Act, is not applicable to the claim of the president and general manager, and the treasurer and assistant general manager, of a corporation so as to bring such claims within section 64b (4), giving priority to "wages due workmen," etc., merely because claimants received salaries. b. Dividends.—Prior to the amendments of 1903, the meaning of “dividends” was important as a basis for compensation of trustees and referees under §§ 40-a and 48-a. The term has been defined as “a parcel of the fund arising from the assets of the estate, rightfully allotted to a creditor entitled to share in the fund, whether in the same proportion with other creditors or in a different proportion.”¹²² It may be doubted whether this is correct, since, under § 65-a, dividends can only be paid on claims which are neither secured nor entitled to priority.¹²³ It may also be doubted whether § 65-a amounts to a definition at all.¹²⁴ The meaning of this word is, however, now unimportant.¹²⁵

c. Property.—The English Bankruptcy Act of 1883 defines property as including “money, goods, things in action, land and every description of property, whether real or personal and whether situate in England or elsewhere, also obligations, easements, and every description of estate, interest or profit, present or future, vested or contingent, arising out of or incident to property as defined above.”¹²⁶ This definition is comprehensive. Section 70-a of our law indicates, in words which are at times oddly narrow and again surprisingly broad, what property passes to the trustee. Otherwise, the law contains no definition of “property.”

I. JURISDICTION IN GENERAL.

a. What are courts of bankruptcy.—As in England, where in the London district the high court, and elsewhere the county courts, have jurisdiction in bankruptcy, our law avails itself of an existing organization and confers bankruptcy jurisdiction on the district courts in the States and Territories, and the corresponding courts in the District of Columbia and Alaska.¹ The English court of bankruptcy in the London district is in effect a separate court, devoted exclusively to bankruptcy matters, and appeals are uniformly heard by the same judge of the Court of Appeal.² This is not so in this country. It would seem, however, that, under our system, the district courts while sitting in bankruptcy are also separate courts, exercising a distinct jurisdiction, different from that, for instance, of the same courts while sitting in admiralty.³

b. Bankruptcy court as court of equity.—A bankruptcy court is a court of equity, seeking to administer the law according to its spirit, and not merely by its letter.⁴ Proceedings in bankruptcy generally are in the nature of proceedings in equity,⁵ and frequently call for the exercise of full equity powers in the ascertainment and proper enforcement of the equities of the parties; where this is so the court may apply equitable rules and will be governed by equitable principles.⁶ But the bankruptcy act does not confer upon the bankruptcy court

The words "at law" as used in the first sentence conferring on courts of bankruptcy "such jurisdiction, at law and in equity, as will enable them to exercise original jurisdiction in bankruptcy proceedings," may have been inserted to meet clause 4, authorizing the trial and punishment of offenses, the jurisdiction over which must necessarily be at law and not in equity. Bardes v. Bank, 4 Am. B. R. 163, 173, 178 U. S. 524.

Equitable jurisdiction.—The bankruptcy court is a court of equity and, controlled by the statute, may do equity guided by the well-defined and established principles of equity jurisprudence. Matter of Syracuse Gardens Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 37 Am. B. R. 354, 231 Fed. 284.

Proceedings in equity.—In the case of Westall v. Avery (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 22 Am. B. R. 673, 171 Fed. 626, the court said: "It is well settled that bankruptcy proceedings themselves are purely equitable in their character and within the limits prescribed by the Bankruptcy Acts and the special rules of practice prescribed by the Supreme Court are to be administered in accord with the general principles and practices of equity."

How it happened that jurisdiction in equity became of an equitable nature is explained historically in an interesting way in Robson's Bankruptcy (2d Ed.), p. 2.

The administration and distribution of the property of bankrupts is a proceeding in equity. The jurisdiction to inquire and determine who the lawful owners are, and to that end to call before it all claimants by a reasonable notice or order to present their claims to the court within a reasonable time or to be barred of any right or interest in the property in its custody or in its proceeds, is a power inherent in every court of equity incidental and indispensable to the authority to administer the property in its possession and to distribute its proceeds. Nisbet v. Federal Title & Trust Co. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 36 Am. B. R. 222, 229 Fed. 644.

Equitable relief.—A bankruptcy court as a court of equity may afford relief where one party with a full opportunity to avoid the result has placed it in the power of another to injure a third. Matter of Virgin (D. C., Ga.), 35 Am. B. R. 494, 224 Fed. 128.

6. Application of equitable rules.—In re Siegel-Hillman Dry Goods Co. (D. C., Mo.), 7 Am. B. R. 351, 358, 111 Fed. 983, holding that cases in bankruptcy are peculiarly within the rule that where a court of equity is charged with the distribution of an estate or a fund under its control, and has before it the several parties whose rights and interests are involved in the administration of the estate, it may, disregarding mere matters of form, but having regard to the substantial rights of all the parties, ascertain the ultimate relation and liability of the several parties, and base its decree thereon, thus avoiding the delay and expense which would be caused if the parties were remitted to the pursuit of their legal rights without aid from a court of equity; In re Chase (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 10 Am. B. R. 677, 680, 124 Fed. 753; Batchelder & Lincoln Co. v. Whitmore (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 10 Am. B. R. 641, 646, 122 Fed. 355, where it was held that the law applicable to proofs of debt in bankruptcy is governed by equitable considerations; In re Broadway Sav. Trust Co. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 18 Am. B. R. 254, 257, 150 Fed. 152, holding that a proceeding in bankruptcy is a proceeding in equity, and the rules and practice in equity prevail as far as they are consonant with the speedy administration of justice which is prescribed; In re Hersikopf (C. Right to trial by jury does not exist in bankruptcy proceedings, except as provided in § 19, post, since such proceedings are equitable in their nature. In re Rude (D. C., Ky.), 4 Am. B. R. 319, 101 Fed. 805; In re Christensen (D. C., Iowa), 4 Am. B. R. 99, 101 Fed. 802.

Writ of ne exeat does not issue unless a suit in equity is commenced; a bankruptcy proceeding is a suit in equity for such purpose. In re Lipke (D. C., N. Y.), 3 Am. B. R. 599, 98 Fed. 970.

Adequate remedy at law.—In the case of Sessler v. Nemcof (D. C., Pa.), 26 Am. B. R. 618, 183 Fed. 656, the court said: "If the trustee has an adequate remedy at law, a bill in equity cannot be maintained, in this or in any other court. Whatever equitable jurisdiction may have been conferred upon the District Court by the Bankruptcy Act and the amendments thereto, it is confined to controversies relating to a bankrupt estate. Within this limited area, whether or not a

c. Jurisdiction is limited by statute.—The origin of courts of bankruptcy is statutory, and they have no powers or jurisdiction other than is conferred on them by, or necessarily implied from, the statute.¹³ Their jurisdiction is limited—that is, limited in respect to the subjects over which they may exercise jurisdiction.¹⁴ They possess only such powers as are conferred upon Amendment of 1903.—The Supreme Court came to this conclusion without reference to the effect of the amendment of 1903 to § 70-e of this act. The effect of this amendment has been considered in Hurley v. Devlin (D. C., Kan.), 17 Am. B. R. 797, 149 Fed. 268, and it was there held that Congress intended to confer upon bankruptcy courts equity jurisdiction in suits arising under § 70-e to set aside transfers which creditors might have avoided. See also Manning v. Evans (D. C., N. J.), 19 Am. B. R. 217, 156 Fed. 106; In re Hutchinson & Wilmoth (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 19 Am. B. R. 313, 318, 158 Fed. 74; Skewis v. Barthell (D. C., Iowa), 18 Am. B. R. 429, 153 Fed. 534. These cases are now confirmed by the amendment of § 23-b by the act of 1910, which expressly authorizes suits for the recovery of property under § 70-e in district courts. The cases of Hull v. Burr (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 18 Am. B. R. 541, 153 Fed. 945; Warmath v. O'Daniel (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 101, 159 Fed. 87, are no longer of any force. The effect of this amendment upon the jurisdiction of the court to entertain plenary suits to set aside transfers in fraud of creditors will be further considered under § 70-e, post.

Proceeding to determine validity of mortgage.—A United States District Court sitting in bankruptcy has jurisdiction of a suit in equity brought by a trustee in bankruptcy to determine the validity of a mortgage and to restrain the foreclosure thereof where the possession of the property is in the court. *Karasik v. Jurisdiction to impress property with trust in favor of third person.—A court of bankruptcy has jurisdiction of an ancillary proceeding instituted by a third person to impress property, in the possession of the court, with a trust in favor of such person, based on the ground that the property was purchased by the bankrupt with funds fraudulently obtained from such person. *Jaffe v. The distribution of the judicial power of the United States among the courts of the United States is entirely within the control of Congress. Johnson Co. v. Wharton, 153 U. S. 252, 260. them, either expressly or by necessary implication.¹⁵ But they are not courts of limited jurisdiction in respect to matters which are within their jurisdiction.¹⁶ In respect to the matters coming within their jurisdiction their judgments possess every attribute of finality and estoppel which pertains to those of courts of general jurisdiction.¹⁷ Such courts are not inferior courts in the sense that essential jurisdictional facts must affirmatively appear upon the record.¹⁸ It is not sufficient to allege facts showing jurisdiction; there must be evidence establishing such facts.¹⁹

d. Jurisdiction either exclusive or concurrent.—There are two distinct classes of jurisdiction conferred upon courts of bankruptcy by this section: First, jurisdiction over the proceedings in bankruptcy, initiated by the petition and ending in the distribution of assets among the creditors, and the discharge of, or refusal to discharge, the bankrupt. Second, jurisdiction as an ordinary court, of suits at law or in equity in respect to the estate of the bankrupt.²⁰ The first class of jurisdiction possessed by such courts is exclusive.²¹ It includes the power to adjudicate as to bankruptcy,²² and, after

The cardinal principle of the bankruptcy act is to conserve to creditors only such rights as would have been theirs had not bankruptcy intervened, and to save to the bankrupt such rights as would have been his against creditors seeking to enforce their claims by ordinary judicial process. In re Cohn (D. A court of bankruptcy is of limited jurisdiction, in the sense that it can take cognizance of particular subjects only, namely, those included within the intendment of the statute; but its jurisdiction is unlimited in respect of its powers over proceedings in bankruptcy specifically made subject to its jurisdiction by § 2. *Sabin v. Limited, but not inferior.—The district court of the United States is a court of limited but not inferior jurisdiction. Exclusive Jurisdiction.—Where a District Court assumes jurisdiction of a bankruptcy proceeding, such jurisdiction is exclusive; and it has power by proper orders to prevent the doing of anything that will at any stage of the proceeding tend to embarrass it in the equitable distribution of the estate of the bankrupt. Virginia Iron, Coal & Coke Co. v. Olcott (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 28 Am. B. R. 321, 197 Fed. 730.

Order of referee as bar to subsequent action in State court.—An order of a referee in bankruptcy, denying the right to recover a check payable to a trustee in bankruptcy, which has been deposited by a person not a creditor, as a part of the deposit required upon a composition, and payment thereon subsequently stopped after some controversy had arisen, is res adjudicata and a bar to a subsequent action in the State court by the maker of the check. Coen v. James (Sup. Ct., App. Div., N. Y.), 33 Am. B. R. 249, 164 N. Y. App. Div. 419.

Right to replevin property in possession of trustee.—Property in possession of a trustee in bankruptcy is under the control of the Bankruptcy Court and cannot be taken on replevin without the consent of said court. Matter of Brockton Ideal Shoe Co. (D. C., Mass.), 32 Am. B. R. 377, 212 Fed. 764.

A creditor may not stand aloof from the bankruptcy proceedings because dissatisfied with the trustee's administration, for there is ample provision in the Bankruptcy Act for his protection by appeal to the referee, and further on to the judge of the court if necessary. Demuth v. Faw (Wash. Sup. Ct.), 42 Am. B. R. 151, 174 Pac. 18.

Revocation of leave to prosecute in State court.—Where a bankruptcy court is through its receivers in complete possession of all the property of the bankrupt and has exclusive jurisdiction of the res, it may, if it deems it proper and advisable, authorize the commencement of an action in the State court to establish an alleged vendor's lien, but it may before adjudication in such action revoke the leave granted and enjoin the party from prosecuting the lien elsewhere than in the District Court. *Inv. C., Mass.), 36 Am. B. R. 354, 230 Fed. 502.

Possession of property by officers of court.—Where the property in dispute is in the actual possession of the court of bankruptcy, there comes into play another principle, not peculiar to courts of bankruptcy, but applicable to all courts, Federal or State. Where a court of competent jurisdiction has taken property into its possession, through its officers, the property is thereby withdrawn from the jurisdiction of all other courts. The court, having possession of the property, has an ancillary jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions respecting the title, possession, or control of the property. In the courts of the United States this ancillary jurisdiction may be exercised, though it is not authorized by any statute. Jurisdiction in such cases arises out of the possession of the property and is exclusive of the jurisdiction of all other courts, although otherwise the controversy would be recognizable in them. Accordingly, where property was in the possession of the bankrupt at the time of the appointment of a receiver, the bankruptcy court has exclusive jurisdiction to determine the title as against an adverse claimant, and a State court has no jurisdictional right to take, or interfere with the possession of, said property in an action of replevin, or otherwise. Darrough v. First National Bank of Claremore (Okla. Sup. Co.), 37 Am. B. R. 75, 156 Pac. 191. See also Jaffe v. Pyle (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 40 Am. B. R. 219, 242 Fed. 67.

a suit brought against the bankrupt prior to the bankruptcy.²⁷ This jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent, if of the subject matter,²⁸ but can if of the person only.²⁹ The court having acquired jurisdiction its adjudication is conclusive upon the parties concerned, until set aside by review or appeal, and it cannot be questioned collaterally.³⁰

e. Jurisdiction of suits to recover property.—The animated controversy as to the proper forum for proceedings to recover property brought by the trustee was, in May, 1900, settled by the Supreme Court in Bardes v. Hawarden Bank.³¹ The amendment of § 23-b and the corresponding changes made in §§ 60-a, 67-e and 70-e by the act of 1903 are declaratory of the principle underlying this decision. The broad and elastic provisions of subdivisions 7 and 15 of this section, conferring, as they do, jurisdiction upon courts of bankruptcy to entertain suits by the trustee for the recovery of property alleged to have belonged to the bankrupt, are no longer limited by the provisions of § 23-b.³² It may be taken as settled that courts of bankruptcy as such have, within their respective territorial limits, ample, though, of course, as to suits, not exclusive, jurisdiction to do everything "which may be necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of the act." The jurisdiction of courts of bankruptcy to entertain suits brought by the trustee for the recovery of property will be further considered under § 23-b.

f. Courts always open.—Courts of bankruptcy are always open for the transaction of business.³³ It is expressly provided in this section that the jurisdiction conferred upon courts of bankruptcy may be exercised "in vacation, in chambers and during their respective terms." In most of the districts, bankruptcy matters are heard on certain days; this, for the convenience of the courts. Orders made in chambers in vacation are as effective as when made at a term or on a rule day.

g. Territorial extent of jurisdiction.—The act of 1867 limited the jurisdiction of courts of bankruptcy to "their respective districts." This has been held to mean that the exercise of those powers was limited to those districts.³⁴

Concurrent jurisdiction of subject matter.—While possession gives jurisdiction over the res, it does not control jurisdiction as to the subject matter. Another court will respect possession but it is at liberty to entertain another cause concerning the same subject matter so long as it does not oust the court first acquiring possession of the res. Brown v. Crawford (D. C., Ore.), 42 Am. B. R. 677, 254 Fed. 146.

Effect of action of trustee on jurisdiction.—No action of the trustee can impair or affect the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court over the bankrupt's estate. Matthews & Sons v. Webre Co. (D. C., La.), 32 Am. B. R. 180, 213 Fed. 396.

As there are no terms of courts in bankruptcy an adjudication may be vacated after the expiration of the term wherein it was entered. The district court, for all purposes of its bankruptcy jurisdiction, is always open. It has no separate terms. Its proceedings in any pending suit, are, therefore, at all times open for re-examination upon application therefor in an appropriate form. Any order made in the progress of the cause may be subsequently set aside and vacated upon proper showing made, provided rights have not become vested under it which will be disturbed by its vacation. Matter of Rochester Baths Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 34 Am. B. R. 355, 222 Fed. 22, citing Sandusky v. National Bank, 23 Wall. 289.

Power to modify orders.—The general rule that the power of a court to modify its orders expires with the term at which they are granted does not apply to a bankruptcy court, as a proceeding in bankruptcy, from the time of its commencement until the final settlement of the estate, is but one suit. Matter of Burr Mfg. Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 32 Am. B. R. 708, 217 Fed. 16. See also Hume v. Myers (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 39 Am. B. R. 401, 242 Fed. 827.

The present act vests jurisdiction in the courts of bankruptcy "within their respective territorial limits as now constituted." A court of bankruptcy may not, therefore, extend its process beyond the territorial limits of the district within which its ordinary jurisdiction may be exercised.³⁵ Thus, a subpoena in bankruptcy is not effective beyond the territorial limits of the court issuing it,³⁶ unless the residence of the person subpoenaed be less than one hundred miles away.³⁷ Likewise a bankruptcy court of one district cannot, by service of process outside of that district, obtain jurisdiction to summarily order a non-resident to deliver moneys collected upon which he claims a lien for

See also under former act, Jobbins v. Montague, Fed. Cas. 7,329.

Enforcement of order beyond territorial limits.—In the case of Staunton v. Wooden (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 24 Am. B. R. 736, 179 Fed. 61, the court said:

"In the present case the court made a summary order, directed against a resident of another State, ordering him to surrender property in that State to the trustee. It may be conceded that the court in which the petition in bankruptcy is filed has plenary jurisdiction in bankruptcy, co-extensive with the United States, to order and control the disposition of the bankrupt's estate, and is vested with jurisdiction to determine all liens thereon and all interests affecting it. Thomas v. Woods (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 23 Am. B. R. 132, 173 Fed. 585, 97 C. C. A. 535; In re Dempster (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 22 Am. B. R. 751, 172 Fed. 353, 97 C. C. A. 51; In re Muncie Pulp Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 18 Am. B. R. 56, 151 Fed. 732, 81 C. C. A. 116; Guardian Trust Co. v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 171 Fed. 43, 96 C. C. A. 285; In re Granite City Bank (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 14 Am. B. R. 404, 137 Fed. 818, 70 C. C. A. 316. But this is not to say that the court of bankruptcy may issue its process to run into another district. It is one thing to issue citation to persons in another jurisdiction to appear before the court of bankruptcy in a proceeding which, in its exclusive jurisdiction, it is authorized to institute with a view to determining liens or rights of property wherever situate; but it is quite another thing to issue process to be enforced in another jurisdiction.

"By whom is the summary order in this case to be executed, and in what manner is obedience to it to be enforced? There is no express provision in the bankruptcy act, or in any statute, indicating the intention of Congress to confer such power. In Toland v. Sprague, 12 Pet. 328, 9 L. Ed. 1093, it was said:

"Whatever may be the extent of their jurisdiction over the subject-matter of suits, in respect to persons and property, it can only be exercised within the limits of the district. Congress might have authorized civil process from any Circuit Court to have run into any State of the Union. It has not done so."

"The Bankruptcy Act of 1867 (Act March 2, 1867, c. 176, 14 Stat. 517) limited the jurisdiction of courts of bankruptcy to 'their respective districts.' The present act invests them with jurisdiction 'within their respective territorial limits as now established, or as they may be hereafter changed;' and it has been held that a court of bankruptcy may not extend its process beyond the territorial limits of the district within which its ordinary jurisdiction may be exercised. In re Waukesha Water Co. (D. C., Wis.), 8 Am. B. R. 715, 116 Fed. 1009; In re Alphin & Lake Cotton Co. (D. C., Ark.), 12 Am. B. R. 653, 131 Fed. 824; In re Steele (D. C., Ala.), 20 Am. B. R. 446, 161 Fed. 886. In view of these considerations, and the authorities, we are of the opinion that the District Court was not possessed of jurisdiction to make and enforce the summary order."

Injunction against third person in another district.—A District Court, sitting as a court of bankruptcy, has no jurisdiction to enjoin a person, who resides in another district and is not a party to the bankruptcy proceedings, from proceeding to enforce an assignment of wages made by a bankrupt, but the proper remedy is by ancillary proceedings instituted in the bankruptcy court in the district wherein such party resides. *Progressive Bldg. & Loan Co. v. U. S. Rev. Stats. § 876 provides that: "Subpenas for witnesses, who are required to attend a court of the United States, in any district, may run into any other district. Provided, That in civil causes the witnesses living out of the district in which the court is held do not live at a greater distance than one hundred miles from the place of holding the same." services.³⁸ In States having several districts, this rule, in spite of the proviso clause of § 41-a, shortens the reach of the district courts and may make their process less effective than that of the State courts. A voluntary appearance of the party living without the district may constitute a waiver of the want of jurisdiction and confer jurisdiction over him,³⁹ although this would not be the case where the court has no jurisdiction of the subject matter.⁴⁰ The territorial limitation of jurisdiction as contained in the preliminary clause of this section is, of course, subject to the qualification made by subd. 20 of the section as added by the amendment of 1910, relative to the exercise of ancillary jurisdiction over persons or property in aid of a receiver or trustee appointed in any bankruptcy proceeding pending in any other court of bankruptcy.⁴¹

h. Ancillary proceedings.—(1) AMENDMENT OF 1910. The amendment of 1910 added subd. 20 to subsection a of this section, expressly authorizing a court of bankruptcy to exercise ancillary jurisdiction within its territorial limits "in aid of a receiver or trustee appointed in any bankruptcy proceeding pending in any other court of bankruptcy."

(2) RULE PRIOR TO AMENDMENT. Prior to the amendment of 1910 it was held that where process to seize the bankrupt's property was necessary, ancillary jurisdiction might be exercised,⁴² although this doctrine had been refuted in a number of well considered cases.⁴³ Under the act of 1867 there was no express provision conferring upon courts of bankruptcy ancillary jurisdiction, but it was held thereunder that such jurisdiction necessarily resulted from the general jurisdiction imposed in them and was in harmony with the scope and

43. Ancillary jurisdiction, prior to amendment of 1910—In re Williams (D. C., Ark.), 9 Am. B. R. 741, 120 Fed. 38, the court was of the opinion that the bankruptcy act makes no provisions for ancillary or auxiliary proceedings in district courts other than that in which the proceedings are pending, and a petition for an injunction to protect the assets of a bankrupt, where the proceedings were pending in another district, was denied. This opinion met the approval of the court in the case of In re Williams (D. C., Tenn.), 10 Am. B. R. 538, 120 Fed. 321, and in the case of In re Von Hartz (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 15 Am. B. R. 747, 142 Fed. 726, where it was held that if a debtor is adjudicated a bankrupt in one district a bankruptcy court in another district cannot make a summary order directing one to whom the bankrupt had assigned his life insurance policy, to turn it over to his trustee. This question was fully discussed by Judge Hammon in Ross-Meehan Foundry Co. v. Car & Foundry Co. (D. C., Tenn.), 10 Am. B. R. 624, 124 Fed. 403, where the conclusion was reached that the "necessity for separate administrations and ancillary proceedings should not exist under any well-regulated system of bankruptcy. The design of the statute is to avoid all ancillary proceedings and secure one uniform possession of the estate by a single court of bankruptcy, having the jurisdiction to administer the assets everywhere under that statute." In the case of Tybo Mining and Reduction Co. (D. C., Nev.), 13 Am. B. R. 62, 132 Fed. 697, Judge Hawley refused to appoint an ancillary trustee to aid in the administration of a bankrupt estate, the proceedings in which were instituted in another district, on the ground that courts of bankruptcy are of limited jurisdiction—such

design of the act.⁴⁴ The better reasoning favored the exercise of such ancillary or auxiliary jurisdiction whenever necessary to preserve the bankrupt estate or recover property belonging to it, situated without the territorial limits of the district within which the estate was to be administered.⁴⁵ Congress has settled this disturbing controversy by expressly conferring upon bankruptcy courts ancillary jurisdiction over persons and property in aid of a receiver or trustee appointed in any bankruptcy proceeding pending in any other court of bankruptcy.⁴⁶

(8) EFFECT OF AMENDMENT. The amendment of 1910 substantiates clearly those cases upholding the exercise of ancillary powers by courts of bankruptcy. However doubtful may have been the authority under the law prior to this amendment, there can be no doubt now that a court of bankruptcy in one district may aid a trustee or receiver, appointed by another in recovering funds belonging to the estate.⁴⁷ The ancillary tribunal may, upon petition, appoint an ancillary receiver to take charge of the property of the alleged bankrupt,⁴⁸ and may make an order and issue subpoenas for the examination of persons concerning the acts, conduct and property of the bankrupt.⁴⁹ Where testimony as the statute gives, and no other—and that the statute confers no such jurisdiction. In the case of In re Dempster (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 22 Am. B. R. 751, 172 Fed. 353, the court held that any proceeding necessary for the protection of the estate had in any other district must take the form of a plenary action at law or suit in equity; the appointment of a receiver can only be made in some cause properly before the court.

R. 519, in which case it was held that where a Missouri corporation was adjudicated a bankrupt and a trustee appointed in proceedings instituted in the district court of the United States in and for the Eastern Division of the Eastern Judicial District of Missouri, the district court of the United States in and for the Southern District of New York has jurisdiction of an application upon the trustee's petition for an order directing officers of the corporation within the jurisdiction of the latter court to deliver to the trustee books and documents of the corporation there in their custody. R. 559, 562, holding that a bankruptcy court of a district in which property of a bankrupt is situated is specifically given ancillary jurisdiction over such property, and may appoint a receiver and take summary proceedings for the restoration of such property so that it may be turned over to the bankruptcy court in which the proceedings are pending, for administration.

Obtaining possession of property.—A court of bankruptcy can exercise ancillary jurisdiction for the purpose of enabling a trustee in bankruptcy, who has been appointed and qualified in another jurisdiction, to reduce to his possession property of the bankrupt which is within the territorial jurisdiction of the court whose ancillary jurisdiction is invoked, and where the court of primary jurisdiction can act summarily, the court exercising ancillary jurisdiction may also proceed by summary order; Matter of Sage (D. C., Mo.), 35 Am. B. R. 436, 224 Fed. 625.

Restraint suit in State court.—A bankruptcy court does not have ancillary jurisdiction to entertain a bill to restrain the prosecution by the defendants of an action in a State court against the complainant, a partner in the bankrupt concern, based on fraudulent transactions, by virtue of a decree in the bankruptcy court, which does not pass upon the rights of the defendants. *Pell v. Ancillary receiver.—A court exercising ancillary jurisdiction acts independently of the court of primary jurisdiction, or of its officers, and for itself. It appoints its own receiver, generally the same person being appointed receiver by the court of primary jurisdiction; but in the seizure, management, sale and distribution of the property seized within the territorial limits of its districts, of which it takes legal custody, this receiver is and must be governed by its orders exclusively. Fidelity Trust Co. v. Gaskell (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 28 Am. B. R. 4, 198 Fed. 865.

Examination of non-resident witnesses.—In the case of In re Robinson (D. C., Minn.), 24 Am. B. R. 617, 179 Fed. 724, it was held that where, upon discharge proceedings, the objecting creditors desire to take the evidence of a witness residing in another Federal only is wanted, it may be obtained by the customary method of deposition.⁵⁰ Where the ancillary tribunal takes possession of the property of the bankrupt within its territorial jurisdiction, such possession clothes such tribunal with the power to determine all questions of priorities and liens affecting such property,⁵¹ and may deal summarily or otherwise with such property, to the same extent and in the same manner as though the original bankruptcy proceedings were pending in such tribunal.⁵² The ancillary jurisdiction conferred by the amendment includes the power to hear and adjudge the adverse claims of parties to the specific property seized as the property of the bankrupt, and in the exercise of such jurisdiction district courts may, according to their adjudications, send the property or its proceeds to the court of primary jurisdiction, or apply them to the satisfaction of such claims.⁵³ There is no doubt that title passes to the trustee as of the date of the adjudication, no matter where the property may be situated;⁵⁴ it is equally certain that the district courts of other districts have jurisdiction to consider suits to recover possession of the bankrupt's property situated therein and by him fraudulently or preferentially transferred.⁵⁵ The ancillary jurisdiction extends to the release of a bankrupt from imprisonment in a State court of an adjoining district pending his application for a discharge.^{55a} district, application for an order requiring such witness to appear before a referee in bankruptcy and give his testimony should be made to the Federal district court of the district where the witness resides. In the case of Matter of Elkus (Sup. Ct.), 23 Am. B. R. 614, 216 U. S. 115, 30 Sup. Ct. 377, the court said: "The questions submitted are: (1) Did the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York have jurisdiction to grant an order for the examination of witnesses, who were residents of that district, when the bankrupt proceedings in which the examination was desired were being administered in the Northern District of Illinois? (2) Have the respective district courts of the United States sitting in bankruptcy ancillary jurisdiction to make orders and issue process in said proceedings pending and being administered in the district court of another district? On the authority of Babbitt, Trustee, etc. v. Dutcher et al. (23 Am. B. R. 519, decided in Feb., 1910), just decided, we answer both questions in the affirmative."

Exercise of ancillary jurisdiction.—The ancillary jurisdiction conferred by subdivision 20 of section 2 is such as the court of original jurisdiction would have had if it had territorial jurisdiction, or such as the court appealed to would have had if the bankruptcy proceeding were pending therein. The ancillary jurisdiction so conferred of proceedings of a summary character is limited to cases in which the court in which the bankruptcy proceeding is pending could act summarily, if it had territorial jurisdiction and of plenary or independent suits to such as come within section 23-b of the Bankruptcy Act. De Frieze v. Bryant (D. C., Ky.), 37 Am. B. R. 275.

The filing of a petition in the bankruptcy court constructively vests it with jurisdiction of all the property of the bankrupt wherever situated, the reduction of such property to actual possession being a mere detail in which a bankruptcy court of ancillary jurisdiction may aid, regardless of diversity of citizenship or amount, provided the property be found within the jurisdiction of such court. In re Musica & Son (D. C., La.), 30 Am. B. R. 555, 205 Fed. 413.

Liens subsequent to adjudication.—The filing of the petition and the adjudication brings the property of the bankrupt, wherever situated, into custodia legis, and it is thus held from the date of the filing of the petition, so that subsequent liens cannot be given or obtained thereon, nor proceedings had in other courts to reach the property the court of original jurisdiction acquires the full right to administer the estate under the bankruptcy law; Lazarus v. Prentice (Sup. Ct., U. S.), 234 U. S. 263, 32 Am. B. R. 559.

Exercise of ancillary jurisdiction.—A bill in equity in which one of the plaintiffs was a citizen of the same State of which the defendants are citizens, which sought to enable one of the plaintiffs to obtain a discharge of liability for a fund in its possession, upon the payment of it into court, one of the defendants being a trustee in bankruptcy, and which also sought an injunction restraining the further prosecution of a proceeding commenced by the trustee in bankruptcy, did not confer jurisdiction upon the District Court upon the ground that the suit was ancillary or auxiliary to the bankruptcy proceeding. Rogers v. Chickamauga Trust Co. (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 42 Am. B. R. 577, 253 Fed. 541.

55. That is, since the amendatory act of 1903. See also Goodall v. Tuttle, Fed. Cas. 5533, and Lathrop v. Drake, 91 U. S. 516; Lawrence v. Lowrie (D. C., Pa.), 13 Am. B. R. 298, 133 Fed. 995.

Ancillary jurisdiction; claims to assets in possession of court.—Ancillary jurisdiction is exercised for the purpose of aiding the court of primary jurisdiction to collect the estates of bankrupts and distribute them among those entitled thereto, and when property which has been transferred within the four months' period, in such circumstances as to suggest fraud, comes into the possession of the court exercising ancillary jurisdiction.

i. Court first acquiring jurisdiction.—It is a familiar rule of law, of universal application, essential to the orderly administration of justice, that in order to avoid a conflict between tribunals of co-equal authority, the court first acquiring jurisdiction must be allowed to pursue it to the end to the exclusion of others, and that it will not permit its jurisdiction to be impaired or subverted by a resort to some other tribunal.⁵⁶ This is especially true where there is conflict of jurisdiction between a bankruptcy court and a State court; in such cases if the bankruptcy court has assumed the custody and control of the bankrupt estate before proceedings are instituted in a State court, the jurisdiction of the former in respect to such estate is absolute and will not be disturbed.⁵⁷ that court, by its very possession, draws to itself the power to determine the interests therein of all parties making claim thereto, and it becomes its duty to so determine and grant complete relief that further litigation in respect thereto may be avoided. In re Lipman, (D. C., N. J.), 29 Am. B. R. 139, 201 Fed. 169; Hartman v. Ackoury (D. C., La.), 31 Am. B. R. 614, 210 Fed. 188.

Summary proceedings to recover assets.—Under clause 20 of this section a District Court of ancillary jurisdiction has authority to appoint a receiver and to take summary proceedings for the restoration of a bankrupt's estate, in the custody of people having no right to it, in order that same may be turned over to the bankruptcy having jurisdiction for administration. Lazarus v. Prentice (Sup. Ct., U. S.), 234 U. S. 263, 32 Am. B. R. 559.

Portion of expense.—Where in a bankruptcy proceeding instituted in New York, ancillary proceedings are had in New Jersey where property of the bankrupt is located, a claim by a landlord under the New Jersey statutes for rent as a prior claim although he has not perfected his lien, is subject to that portion of the total expenses of the estate of the bankrupt, wherever situated, which the value of the chattels lying upon the demise premises when the petition in bankruptcy was filed bore to the value of the gross estate. Matter of Braus (D. C., N. Y.), 37 Am. B. R. 594, 233 Fed. 835.

Intervention.—A party may not intervene in an ancillary suit brought by the trustee or receiver, the sole purpose of which is to collect assets of the bankrupt for transmission to the bankruptcy court for administration. West v. Empire Life Ins. Co. (D. C., Wash.), 40 Am. B. R. 93, 242 Fed. 605.

Court first acquiring jurisdiction.—The United States Supreme Court in the case of Pickens v. Dent, 9 Am. B. R. 47, 187 U. S. 177, sustained the jurisdiction of a State court where it appeared that such court had had for years complete jurisdiction and control over the bankrupt and his property, and said: "The jurisdiction was not divested by the proceedings in bankruptcy, and it was the right and duty of that court to proceed to final decree notwithstanding adjudication, the rule being applicable that the court which first obtains rightful jurisdiction over the subject-matter should not be interfered with." The court cited the case of Frazier v. Southern Loan & Trust Co., 3 Am. B. R. 710, 99 Fed. 707, in which Goff, J., said: "The Bankruptcy Act of 1898 does not in the least modify this rule, but with unusual careful-ness guards it in all of its details, provided the suit pending in the State court was instituted more than four months before the District Court had adjudicated the bankruptcy of the party entitled to an interest in the subject-matter of such controversy."

Other cases declaring this same principle are In re Price & Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 1 Am. B. R. 606, 92 Fed. 987; In re Gerdes (D. C., Ohio), 4 Am. B. R. 346, 102 Fed. 318; In re Tune (D. C., Ala.), 8 Am. B. R. 285, 115 Fed. 906, in which case the court held that in cases of concurrent jurisdiction the court first obtaining possession of the property administers it, but where that court loses jurisdiction, and it is transferred by operation of valid laws to a court of the United States, which has exclusive jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the question becomes one of paramount authority of the constitution, and comity can have no influence in determining the right. In re Wells (D. C., Mo.), 8 Am. B. R. 75, 114 Fed. 222; Metcalf v. Barker (Sup. Ct.), 187 U. S. 175, 9 Am. B. R. 36; In re English (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 11 Am. B. R. 674, 127 Fed. 940, revg. 10 Am. B. R. 133.

Rate proceeding against public service company.—A voluntary proceeding in bankruptcy by a public service corporation supplying gas to a city, cannot in judicial contemplation be regarded as undue interference with a suit in the State court by the city and another against said corporation and a holding company to enjoin an increase in the charge for gas. City of Holland v. Holland City Gas Co. (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 44 Am. B. R. 66, 257 Fed. 679.

Possession of property as controlling jurisdiction.—Justice Moody, speaking for the Supreme Court of the United States, in Murphy v. John Hoffman Co., 211 U. S. 562, 568, 21 Am. B. R. 487, 29 Sup. Ct. 154, 156, 53 L. ed. 327-330, says: "Where the property in dispute is in the actual possession of the court of bankruptcy there comes into play another principle, not peculiar to courts of bankruptcy but applicable to all courts, Federal or State. Where a court of competent jurisdiction has taken property into its possession, through its officers, the property is thereby withdrawn from the jurisdiction of all other courts. The court, having possession of the property, has an ancillary jurisdiction

There are essential exceptions to the rule as to the jurisdiction of State courts based upon prior acquisition, as where a lien would be acquired by proceedings therein within four months of the bankruptcy, or where such proceedings were instituted under State insolvency laws, a receiver or assignees being appointed therein during the four months' period.⁵⁸ As between two bankruptcy courts, the one in which the petition is first filed ought to be accorded exclusive jurisdiction over the case.⁵⁹ This question of priority of jurisdiction will be more fully considered under other sections of the act.⁶⁰

j. Expedition in exercise of jurisdiction.—The bankruptcy act contemplates that the bankrupt's estate shall be administered with all convenient dispatch, so that the property may be distributed and the bankrupt be discharged.⁶¹

to hear and determine all questions respecting the title, possession, or control of the property. In the courts of the United States this ancillary jurisdiction may be exercised, though it is not authorized by any statute. Jurisdiction in such cases arises out of the possession of the property and is exclusive of the jurisdiction of all other courts, although otherwise the controversy would be cognizable in them. Wabash R. Co. v. Adelbert College, 208 U. S. 38, 54, 28 Sup. Ct. 182, 52 L. Ed. 379, 386. Accordingly, where property was in the possession of the bankrupt at the time of the appointment of a receiver, it was held that the bankruptcy court had jurisdiction to determine the title to it as against an adverse claimant, and that the receiver had no right to deliver it to him without the order of the court. Whitney v. Wenman, 198 U. S. 539, 14 Am. B. R. 45, 25 Sup. Ct. 778, 49 L. Ed. 1157."

Conflict with State court.—When property is taken and held under process, in rem or final, of a court of the United States, it is in the custody of the law, and within the exclusive jurisdiction of the court from which the process has issued, for the purposes of the writ, and the possession of the officer cannot be disturbed by process from any State court. Darrough v. First National Bank of Claremore (Okla. Sup. Ct.), 37 Am. B. R. 75, 156 Pac. 191; Meek v. Egge-man (Okla. Sup. Ct.), 36 Am. B. R. 488, 155 Pac. 522.

Possession of property in controversy.—The jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court appears to turn upon the question whether or not it has the possession of the fund or property over which the controversy arises. If it has such possession, jurisdiction follows. If it does not have possession, it is without jurisdiction. In cases of this character where the bankruptcy court has no jurisdiction, the State court has jurisdiction. In cases where the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction, the State court has concurrent jurisdiction with it. Union Banking Co. v. Truscott Boat Mfg. Co. (Mich. Sup. Ct.), 36 Am. B. R. 176, 155 N. W. 717.

Maritime liens; admiralty jurisdiction.—Where an admiralty court, by libel proceedings, acquires complete jurisdiction of a vessel before bankruptcy proceedings are inaugurated its jurisdiction is exclusive and will be retained to allow that court to determine all the lien claims which may be asserted against the vessel, whether presented before or after the filing of the bankruptcy petition or the adjudication in bankruptcy; and the proceeds of the sale will not be paid over to the trustee in bankruptcy but will be paid into the registry of the court. (See Am. B. R. Dig., §§ 14, 451, 469); The Philomena (D. C., Mass.), 37 Am. B. R. 220, 200 Fed. 859.

Where a bankruptcy court, through its receiver duly appointed, has taken possession of vessels belonging to the bankrupt, its jurisdiction is exclusive and will not be ousted to allow the enforcement of a libel in admiralty against the vessels, especially where the libellant's rights can be as well protected in the bankruptcy proceedings, even though the libels are founded on services rendered before the institution of bankruptcy proceedings. The Casco (D. C., Mass.), 37 Am. B. R. 215, 230 Fed. 929.

Such disposition should be made of bankruptcy cases that creditors may expeditiously realize what they may; but the substance of things and not the forms merely should be observed. In re Faulkner (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 542, 161 Fed. 900; Matter of Soloway & Katz (C. C. A., 2nd Cir.), 37 Am. B. R. 257, 234 Fed. 67.

With this end in view the court will see to it that the proceedings are conducted without unnecessary delay.⁶³ Proper regard must of course be had for the fundamental rights of the interested parties.⁶⁵

II. AS TO ADJUDICATION OF BANKRUPTCY.

a. In general.—Subdivision 1 of this section limits the power of the bankruptcy court to adjudicate the bankruptcy of persons to such as "have had their principal place of business, resided, or had their domicile" within the territorial jurisdiction of the court for the preceding six months or the greater portion thereof. Under the former law domicile and residence were often held equivalent terms. By that act when residence within the district was required, the word "domicile" was not used.⁶⁴ The confusion resulting from the conflicting decisions as to whether residence included domicile has been obviated by inserting in this subdivision the language "resided, or had their domicile" within the jurisdiction of the court.⁶⁵ To determine whether a court of bankruptcy may entertain a petition to adjudicate the bankruptcy of a debtor it must appear that he either, (1) had his principal place of business within the district; (2) or resided therein; (3) or had his domicile therein; and it must also appear that such place of business had been maintained, or such residence or domicile had been had, within such jurisdiction for the greater portion of the six months prior to the time when the petition for an adjudication of bankruptcy has been presented to the court. The existence of these requirements is jurisdictional and the effect of failure to show the same may not be waived by the voluntary appearance of the debtor.⁶⁶ The court may of its own volition

63. Unnecessary delay to be avoided.—The purpose of the act requires the court to cause the property and assets of the bankrupt to be collected, marshaled and distributed without unnecessary delay. In re Lisk Mfg. Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 21 Am. B. R. 674, 167 Fed. 411.

As stated by Mr. Justice Miller in Bailey v. Glover, 21 Wall. 346: "It is obviously one of the purposes of the bankruptcy law that there should be a speedy distribution of the bankrupt's assets. This is only secondary in importance to securing equality of distribution. The act is filled with provisions for the quick and summary disposal of questions arising in the progress of the case, without regard to the usual modes of trial attended with some delay." See also Wiswall v. Campbell, 93 U. S. 347. These cases arose under the former bankruptcy act, but are equally applicable to the present act.

63. Boyd v. Glucklich (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 8 Am. B. R. 393, 116 Fed. 131, in which the court said: "Dispatch in judicial proceedings is commendable, but in proceedings involving the liberty of a citizen, he has a right not only to be informed of the precise claim against him, but, after receiving that information, he has a right to a reasonable time to prepare his answer and present his proofs, and, lastly, to be heard by counsel on the law and facts of the case."

Effect of section 740 of the Revised Statutes (Jud. Code, § 52).—In the case of Hills v. McKinniss Co. (D. C., Ohio), 26 Am. B. R. 329, 188 Fed. 1012, the court said:

"We are referred by defendant to section 740 of the Revised Statutes (Judiciary Code, § 52), providing that suits not of a local nature against a single defendant must be brought in the district in which such defendant resides, and it is urged that section 2 of the Bankruptcy Act does not in any way change or modify this general provision.

"We are not willing to agree with defendant that the Bankruptcy Act is in entire harmony with this general provision, for, as we have seen, the former omits the question of the present residence of the bankrupt altogether from the consideration of jurisdiction.

"A system of bankruptcy national in its character to be uniform in its operation must of necessity be unique in its method of administration, and when one of its provisions involving the very policy of the law is deemed inconsistent with the general law, the special provision must control."

inquire into the facts as to these jurisdictional requirements so as to protect itself against fraud or imposition.⁶⁷ Subdivision 1 further provides that the power to adjudicate will exist in the court where the debtor has not had his principal place of business, does not reside, nor have his domicile within the United States but has property within the jurisdiction of the court, and also where a debtor, who has been adjudged a bankrupt by a court of competent jurisdiction without the United States, has property within the court's jurisdiction. In both of such cases, the location of the property of the debtor will determine the jurisdiction of the court. The jurisdiction of the court is further limited by the provisions of section 4 of the act which specifies the persons who may become bankrupts.

b. Domicile of debtor.—It will be noticed from the language of subdivision 1 that either domicile or residence within the territorial limits of the court will be sufficient to confer jurisdiction. It is not essential that both should exist.⁶⁸ Domicile means more than residence. To constitute domicile there must exist in combination the fact of residence and also the intent to remain,—the animus manendi.⁶⁹ The district in which an alleged bankrupt has resided during the greater portion of the six months next preceding the filing of a petition against him is the “district of his domicile” within the meaning of Gen-

Finn v. Carolina Portland Cement Co. (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 37 Am. B. R. 449, 232 Fed. 815. See Am. B. R. Digest, § 18.

Jurisdiction dependent on residence or place of business.—Where in an involuntary proceeding an objection to the jurisdiction of the court upon the ground of lack of residence or place of business is raised by the alleged bankrupt within a month after adjudication and before any further proceedings are had, and the same objection is raised by two creditors before adjudication, the court must hear the objection, although the bankrupt first appeared by filing demurrers to the petition, going to the merits of the controversy, without objecting to the jurisdiction. Finn v. Carolina Portland Cement Co. (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 37 Am. B. R. 449, 232 Fed. 815.

Jurisdiction of partnership; section 5c, construed.—Under section 5c of the Bankruptcy Act a court which has jurisdiction over one partner can take to itself jurisdiction over the firm of which he is a member without reference to whether the firm is six months old or three months old, and without there being any specific allegation as to the firm's principal place of business. Matter of Mitchell (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 33 Am. B. R. 463, 219 Fed. 690.

R. 649, in which the referee says: “If a person has had any one of the three (place of business, residence or domicile) in the district for the greater part of six months immediately preceding the date of bankruptcy there is jurisdiction in the bankruptcy court of that district to proceed with the case.” See also In re Clisdell (Ref., N. Y.), 2 Am.

B. R. 424; In re Berner (Ref., Ohio), 2 Am. B. R. 197, 93 Fed. 943.

69. Distinction between residence and domicile.—In the case of In re Garneau (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 11 Am. B. R. 679, 127 Fed. 677, the court says: “There is, of course, a legal distinction between ‘domicile’ and ‘residence’; although the terms are generally used as synonymous, the distinction depends upon the connection in which and the purpose for which the terms are used. ‘Domicile’ is the place where one has his true, fixed, permanent home, and principal establishment, and to which, whenever he is absent he has the intention of returning, and where he exercises his political rights. There must exist in combination the fact of residence and the animus manendi.” See, also, In re Dinglehoeft Bros. (D. C., N. Car.), 6 Am. B. R. 242, 109 Fed. 866; In re Owings (D. C., N. Car.), 15 Am. B. R. 472, 140 Fed. 30; In re Scott (Ref., Mass.), 7 Am. B. R. 35; In re Williams (D. C., Wash.), 3 Am. B. R. 677, 99 Fed. 544; In re Berner (Ref., Ohio), 3 Am. B. R. 325; In re Grimes (D. C., N. Car.), 2 Am. B. R. 160, 96 Fed. 529; Matter of Davis (D. C., N. J.), 33 Am. B. R. 16, 217 Fed. 113, holding that domicile is of more extensive signification than residence and includes, beyond mere physical presence at a particular locality, an intention to constitute it a permanent abiding place.

The distinction between residence and domicile, that a man may reside in one State and be domiciled in another, noted in applying laws relating to the electoral franchise, may be applied in construing the Bankruptcy Act, and it is not impossible that the courts of two districts may have jurisdiction to entertain a petition against the same debtor, that one acting which is first invoked. Matter of Lemen (D. C., Ohio), 30 Am. B. R. 638, 208 Fed. 80.

eral Order VI.⁷⁰ Under this order if two or more petitions shall be filed against the same person in different districts the first hearing must be had in the district in which the debtor has his domicile.^{70a} Domicile as here used means the place where the debtor permanently had his home for the greater portion of the six months preceding his bankruptcy, as distinguished from a residence temporarily acquired in some other place.⁷¹ Residence may involve the intent to leave when the purpose for which it has been acquired has ceased;⁷² domicile implies no such intent.⁷³ A debtor who absconds does not lose his domicile within the meaning of the act.⁷⁴ The fact that the alleged bankrupt is a roving character, and never residing at any place for the required period of time, does not affect the necessity of proving that such bankrupt had resided for a greater portion of the previous six months within the territorial limits of the court.⁷⁵ A domicile once acquired is presumed to continue until it is shown to have been changed.⁷⁶ Where it is alleged that there has been an abandonment of the old domicile and an establishment of a new one the burden of proof lies upon the person who asserts the change.⁷⁷ The domicile of any one of two or more partners would be sufficient to support the jurisdiction of the court.⁷⁸ It being established by both the petition and answer in an involuntary proceeding that the requisite jurisdictional fact as to domicile exists, the jurisdiction of the court may not be collaterally attacked after adjudication.⁷⁹

c. Residence of debtor.—The word “resided” as used in subdivision 1 is of

Intention of debtor.—In determining the residence of a debtor his intention as expressed by him is always a fact to be considered, but should be measured in the light of the facts in the case and especially in the light of his own conduct. Matter of Lemen (D. C., Ohio), 30 Am. B. R. 638, 206 Fed. 80.

72. Removal for particular purpose.—A removal from one's place of residence does not prime facie prove a change in his domicile, when it appears that the removal was, for some particular purpose, expected to be only of a temporary nature, and which is not inconsistent with an intention to return to the original domicile. Matter of Davis (D. C., N. J.), 33 Am. B. R. 16, 217 Fed. 113.

73. In re Berner (Ref., Ohio), 3 Am. B. R. 325.

Intention of remaining.—Two things must concur to establish a domicile—the fact of residence and the intention of remaining. In re Owings (D. C., N. Car.), 15 Am. B. R. 472, 140 Fed. 739; In re Dinglehoef Bros. (D. C., N. Car.), 6 Am. B. R. 242, 109 Fed. 866.

The fact that the act so plainly makes residence, domicile or conduct of business for something less than the whole time immediately before the filing of the petition the sole criterion of jurisdiction suggests that the personal movements of the bankrupt are immaterial. The burden of establishing a change of domicile is not discharged by showing that the bankrupt had decided to remain permanently away from his old domicile, without showing an intention to remain permanently in the new place. Matter of Davis (D. C., N. J.), 33 Am. B. R. 16, 217 Fed. 113.

Relinquishment of domicile.—Where the bankrupt had formerly relinquished both his residence and domicile in the State of New York in order to acquire a residence in New Jersey, which would justify him in bringing an action for divorce, he should not be permitted to seek the jurisdiction of a district court in New York to be relieved of his debts. Matter of Lipphart (D. C., N. Y.), 28 Am. B. R. 705, 201 Fed. 103.

slight importance. Cases may arise where it may be useful, as when a debtor attempts to escape bankruptcy by denying domicile. Residence may mean no more than sojourning. It is a personal presence in a fixed and permanent abode as distinguished from a temporary occupation, but it does not include as much as domicile, which requires an intention combined with residence.⁸⁰ If the residence, not amounting to a domicile, continues for the required portion of the three months preceding the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, it will be sufficient to clothe the court with jurisdiction.⁸¹ If change of residence is asserted the burden of proof is upon him who asserts it.⁸²

d. Principal place of business.—(1) IN GENERAL.—A court of bankruptcy may, under subdivision 1 of this section, adjudge a person bankrupt who has had his principal place of business within the territorial jurisdiction of the court for the preceding six months or the greater portion thereof although he may not have resided or had his domicile therein during such period. The former Bankruptcy Act used the words "carried on business" instead of "had their principal place of business" as in the present section.⁸³ Principal place of business means the place where the principal affairs and business of the debtor are transacted,⁸⁴ as a principal and not as an agent or employee; generally speaking a person who is employed by another on a salary, having no business of his own, may not have a "place of business," within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act.⁸⁵ The residence of the debtor will not control as to his principal place of business; he may reside in one district and be adjudged a bankrupt in another district in which he has his principal place of business.⁸⁶

(2) OF CORPORATIONS.—The question as to what constitutes a principal place of business arises more frequently in respect to a corporation. It is not necessarily where the manager happens to be located or the stock book and record book to be kept, although those are significant facts. The determination of the principal place of business of a corporation is to be gathered from a general survey of the corporation's activities and depends upon a comparison of the activities at each place in respect to their character, importance and amount.^{86a} The principal office of a corporation as specified in its articles of incorporation will not control. The principal place of business may not be conclusively determined by the designation thereof in a certificate of incorporation or of authority to transact business, unless it actually appears that business is done there.⁸⁷ The district

A natural person might reside in one State and have his principal, or for that matter his sole place of business in another State. See Am. B. R. Dig. § 19.

A farmer who lived in one district and whose business consisted of raising, buying and selling farm products, buying and slaughtering live stock and selling the meat from a stall in a market place in a city in another district where he exhibited and sold all but a comparatively small portion of the produce handled by him, was held to have a principal place of business in the city. In re Mackey (D. C., Del.), 6 Am. B. R. 577, 110 Fed. 355.

Partners residing in other districts.—Evidence examined and held sufficient to show that the principal place of business of a partnership was within the jurisdiction of the court at the time of the commencement of involuntary proceedings against it and during six months prior thereto, although the members of the firm resided in another district and there conducted a smaller business. court of the district in which the assets, manufacturing plant and business office of a corporation are located will have jurisdiction as against the court of the district in which the articles of incorporation specify that the principal place of business is located.⁸⁸ Corporations are frequently organized under the statutes of one State for the purpose of transacting business in another State. The requirement that a corporation so organized shall have an office within the State where incorporated will not preclude the exercise of jurisdiction by a court of bankruptcy in a district other than that in which such office is located.⁸⁹ If the office be the place where the business affairs of the corporation are managed it may determine the jurisdiction of the court, although

Articles of incorporation as determining.—Where there is any doubt on the question as to the principal place of business of a bankrupt corporation the proper course would be to yield to the provisions of the articles of incorporation in determining where the corporation's principal place of business is, although the fact that such articles fixed a named city as the principal place of business is not always conclusive of the question. Matter of Pennington & Co. (D. C., Ky.), 35 Am. B. R. 832, 228 Fed. 388.

88. Place where business is transacted.—In the case of Dressel v. North State Lumber Co. (D. C., N. Car.), 5 Am. B. R. 744, 107 Fed. 255, it appeared that the certificate of incorporation specified the home office of the corporation to be in Detroit, Mich., while all its assets, its plant and business were located in Durham, N. C. The court said: "It would be an anomalous construction of the law, and defeat one of the purposes of the bankruptcy act, to hold that by the mere assertion in the articles of association a corporation can fix its principal office in one State or district when in fact all its property is located and its business transacted in a distant district, and thus escape the jurisdiction of the courts in both districts."

R. 474, 208 Fed. 945, holding that the bankruptcy court in the district where a corporation for the last six months has had its factory, and executive office, where its books have been kept and principal banking done and payments made, has jurisdiction of a voluntary proceeding notwithstanding the creditors have the day before filed a petition in another district in which the principal place of business named in the articles of incorporation is located.

Location of property.—The fact that the greater portion of the property of a bankrupt corporation is at a given place is some evidence, though not controlling, that its principal place of business was located there. Matter of Pennington & Co. (D. C., Ky.), 35 Am. B. R. 832, 228 Fed. 388.

The place where a mining corporation carries on extensive operations, where its maps and original deeds of property are kept, where a large number of company houses and important commissary stores are maintained, where the bulk of its property is situated, where suits and liens would naturally be enforced, where it complied with the statute, and where its superintendent and manager actually reside, should be considered its "principal place of business," rather than an office in another State, in which the books were kept, the general guidance of the business effected, and from which the selling was conducted. Where a West Virginia coal company, though its charter stated that its principal place of business was in that State, as were its mines and real estate, had from the time of its incorporation and for six months prior to the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings maintained its executive office and principal place of business in Philadelphia, the bankruptcy court of the Eastern District of Pennsylvania having first acquired jurisdiction should retain the same as against the bankruptcy court in West Virginia, it not appearing that the greater convenience of parties would be promoted by a transfer. Mining corporation not yet engaged in business.—The charter of a corporation organized for the purpose of mining provided that its principal place of business should be at Phoenix, Arizona. The corporation had never done any mining, but its activities were principally connected with the sale of its stock and the payment of its running expenses, and the only place in which business had been conducted was an office in New York City, the rent of which was being paid by its president at the time the board of directors met there and authorized him to file a voluntary petition. The books were all kept there, all meetings of the board were held there and all moneys of the company were disbursed from there, no meetings having ever been held at Phoenix, except the technical ones required by the law of Arizona. Held, that the principal place of business, if any, was in New York City, so that the District Court for the Southern District of New York had jurisdiction to adjudicate it a bankrupt in voluntary proceedings. factories, mills or mines in another district are operated therefrom.⁹⁰ The question is one of fact to be determined in each particular case by the character of the corporation, its purposes, and the kind of business it is engaged in;⁹¹ and the burden of proof that the principal place of business was in a certain district, other than that specified in the articles of incorporation, is on the petitioning creditors.⁹² Business transacted in a district by a receiver of a corporation appointed to collect assets and turn them into money, is not "business" as meant by the phrase "principal place of business."⁹³ The failure of a foreign corporation to secure a certificate permitting it to do business in a State does not affect the jurisdiction of a court of bankruptcy, nor alter the fact that the principal place of business of the corporation is where its principal business is done.⁹⁴ And the fact that a foreign corporation has filed a certificate in a public office designating its "place of business" within the state does not establish such "place of business" within the meaning of this section, unless business is actually carried on at such place.⁹⁵ Where there is doubt as to which of two States is the location of the principal place of business of a corporation, it should be decided in favor of the State in which it was incorporated.⁹⁶ Where there are two alleged bankrupt corporations, whose business transactions are so intermingled as to be impossible of separation, requiring administration under one jurisdiction, the proceedings may be con-

It acquired a lease of a theatre in Massachusetts, made a substantial deposit with the lessor, installed certain chattels used in its business, and never had any office from which its business was conducted, except that connected with the theatre. The lessor brought an action in the State court of Massachusetts in which a receiver was appointed, and a judgment rendered relieving the corporation from forfeiture upon its making certain payments, which it failed to do, and thereafter a petition in bankruptcy was filed against it in Massachusetts. Question of fact.—The principal place of business of a corporation during the six months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy is to be determined purely by the facts, and not by intentions of the corporate authorities or recitals in the charter. Matter of San Antonio Land & Irrigation Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 36 Am. B. R. 512, 228 Fed. 984.

e. Preceding six months.—The alleged bankrupt must have resided, had his domicile, or transacted business within the district for six months or the greater portion thereof preceding the application. This does not mean the full period of six months prior to the filing of the petition;⁹⁸ a residence, domicile or transaction of business for more than three months, whether at the beginning or end of the period of six months, will be sufficient.⁹⁹ The apparent intent of the section is that no adjudication may be had where three months have not elapsed since the alleged bankrupt acquired a domicile, residence or place of business within the district.¹⁰⁰ It has been held that where a voluntary petition was filed prior to the expiration of such period, the adjudication should be set aside, but that upon proper application being made after the expiration of such period a new order of adjudication would be entered.¹⁰¹

f. Alien bankrupts.—An alien may be adjudged bankrupt, provided he has property within the United States, or, if he has been adjudged bankrupt in the bankruptcy courts of another country and does not reside but has property within the United States.¹⁰²

g. Property within district.—The jurisdiction extends also to persons and corporations who reside, have a domicile or place of business in another district provided they have property within the district in which the jurisdiction is exercised. The actual situs of the property of a person or corporation will control, and the general doctrine mobilia sequuntur personam will not apply.¹⁰³

¹⁰³ The meaning of the word "property" under section 2 of the Bankruptcy Act, giving jurisdiction of a corporation having property within a district but its principal place of business, residence, or domicile without the United States, should be much the same as that under judicial decisions relating to matters of taxation and attachment, and the situs of property is not to be

h. Removal from one district to another.—The removal of a person from one district to another for the purpose of pretending to acquire a residence so that a petition in bankruptcy might be filed by him in a district in which he did not reside, with the intention of leaving the place as soon as his discharge was granted, does not make him a resident of the district, and such facts being disclosed upon his examination, his creditors may have the proceedings dismissed for want of jurisdiction, the adjudication in bankruptcy not being conclusive upon them.¹⁰⁴

i. Effect of adjudication, in rem.—An adjudication acts both in personam and in rem. The property of the bankrupt at once vests in the trustees subsequently to be appointed, remaining meanwhile in custodia legis. In this the law is defective, and the resultant difficulties and dangers are not fully met by § 2 (3) authorizing the appointment of receivers. In the absence of an official with powers and functions similar to those of the official receiver in England,¹⁰⁵ the custody of the court in the interregnum between the filing of the petition and the appointment and qualification of the trustee is often more theoretical than actual. The practice has grown up in some districts of appointing receivers in all cases; this rests on doubtful authority, because not always "absolutely necessary for the preservation of estates," is expensive and sometimes proves an interference with the right given the creditors to choose their trustee. In other districts, the attorney in charge is held responsible for the property. In still others, the property is in effect put under the seal of the court by being locked up and the keys delivered to the referee. While the rules of the western district of Michigan establish the practice of making the referee to whom the case has been referred and who is, therefore, "the court" as well, eo nomine the receiver in every voluntary case.¹⁰⁶

III. CLAIMS.

Subdivision 2 of the section authorizes a court of bankruptcy to allow, disallow, and reconsider the allowance or disallowance of claims. This jurisdiction will be fully discussed hereafter.¹⁰⁷

IV. RECEIVERS, APPOINTMENT AND POWERS.

a. In general.—A court of bankruptcy may, under subdivision 3 of this section, appoint receivers of the property of the alleged bankrupt when absolutely necessary for the preservation of the bankrupt estate, "after the filing of the petition and until it is dismissed or the trustee is qualified." The court may also, under subdivision 15, make such orders and interlocutory judgments and issue such process as may be necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of the act. This is in recognition of the equity powers of the court and authorizes intervention by the court, through a receivership or otherwise, to determined by general doctrines, such as "mobilia sequuntur personam." Corporate stock and bond certificates pledged with a trust company and money in an account with the trust company is property within the district so as to confer jurisdiction. But a deposit to meet unpaid coupons is a trust deposit belonging to the holders of the coupons, and is not property within the district belonging to the bankrupt. Matter of San Antonio Land & Irrigation Co. (D. preserve the property of the alleged bankrupt. If appointed under the former provision he is the custodian of the estate, but may be clothed with such powers as to the court may seem necessary, subject, however, to the title to be acquired by the trustee upon his appointment and qualification.¹⁰⁸ The necessity of providing for the appointment of a receiver is obvious. A considerable time must necessarily elapse between the filing of a petition and the adjudication of bankruptcy and selection and qualification of a trustee. During this period opportunity may be afforded for the dissipation or depreciation of the assets either by the alleged bankrupt, or by third persons, with or without his connivance.¹⁰⁹

b. When receiver should be appointed.—(1) WHEN ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY.—The power to appoint may be exercised in either voluntary or involuntary proceedings. The power to appoint is statutory and may only be exercised when “absolutely necessary for the preservation of estates.”¹¹⁰ The necessity

Object of receivership.—The duty required and the power conferred clearly are that the receiver or the marshal should take possession of property that would otherwise go to waste, and hold it and preserve it, so that it might come to the trustee, when selected, without needless injury. Boonville Nat. Bank v. Blakey (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 6 Am. B. R. 13, 107 Fed. 891.

Preservation of assets and appointment of receiver.—Courts of bankruptcy are invested with such jurisdiction at law and equity as will enable them to exercise original jurisdiction in bankruptcy proceedings, in vacation, in chambers, and during their respective terms, to appoint receivers or marshals, in case the courts shall find it absolutely necessary for the preservation of estates, to take charge of the property of bankrupts after the filing of the petition, and until it is dismissed or the trustee is qualified. Darrough v. First National Bank of Claremore (Okla. Sup. Ct.), 37 Am. B. R. 75, 156 Pac. 101. See Am. B. R. Dig. § 207.

Quasi-receivership.—Where unusual efforts are required to preserve an estate pending bankruptcy proceedings, receivership is usually called for; but even where full receivership is not demanded, a court of bankruptcy may and should exercise a quasi-receivership, to the extent at least of making provisions in advance for necessary services intended, in case of bankruptcy adjudication, to be made a charge against the estate. Matter of Estate of Kinnane Co. (C. R. 181, 174 Fed. 634, the court said: “Congress recognized the necessity for caution by limiting the appointment of receivers to cases where it is ‘absolutely necessary’ for the preservation of the estate. In other words, the reason for such interference with such rights of property must be clear, positive and certain. Of course cases frequently arise where this remedy may be necessary,—cases where there is a reason to believe that the property may be stolen or secreted, or turned over to favored creditors. But fraud cannot be presumed, neither can danger to property be predicated of acts which are honest and lawful. It cannot be presumed that an assignee under a State law intends to plunder the fund he is appointed to administer. Unless something be shown to the contrary the presumption is persuasive that during the interval between the filing of the petition and the appointment of a trustee, the property will be entirely safe in the hands of the assignee.” And see Ingram v. Ingram Dart Lighterage Co. (D. C., Ga.), 34 Am. B. R. 622, 226 Fed. 53.

Preservation of estate.—In no case should a receiver in bankruptcy be appointed except where, upon clear and convincing proof, the court finds it absolutely necessary for the preservation of the estate. Matter of Oakland Lumber Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 23 Am. B. R. 181, 174 Fed. 634. An alleged bankrupt cannot, by his consent, waive the limitation as to the necessity of the appointment of a receiver for the preservation of the estate. Faulk & Co. v. Steiner (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 21 Am. B. R. 623, 165 Fed. 861. See also In re Desrochers (D. C., N. Y.), 25 Am. B. R. 708, 183 Fed. 901.

Property in hands of State court receiver.—Where the property of a bankrupt is lawfully in the hands of a receiver appointed by a State court, a bankruptcy court will not appoint a receiver, as to do so would be entirely useless and futile. Matter of Hargadine-McKittrick, etc. Co. (D. C., Mo.), 39 Am. B. R. 142, 239 Fed. 155.

of showing that the receivership is necessary for the preservation of the estate will not be obviated by the consent of the bankrupt.¹¹¹ And it must affirmatively appear that the assets of the alleged bankrupt are likely to be dissipated or wasted pending the adjudication.¹¹²

(2) CAUTION TO BE USED.— Unless the creditors as a whole are to be benefited by the receivership, a receiver should not be appointed. It must appear that the appointment will protect their interests by the preservation of the estate. A creditors' petition for a receivership will usually be granted where it appears that otherwise the bankrupt's estate will be left wholly unprotected, and be subject to dissipation, especially where there is no fraud or collusion and the other interested parties do not object.¹¹³ The court will carefully scrutinize arrangements made whereby attorneys for the parties are to profit by the receivership; if it appears that the appointment was secured by connivance of the interested parties and their attorneys and that some motive existed, as an agreed division of the fees or the like, for securing such appointment, the court should vacate the order.¹¹⁴

(3) EFFECT OF ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS.— Where an assignment for the benefit of creditors has been made within the four months period, constituting an act of bankruptcy, and an assignee or receiver of the property of the debtor has been appointed by a State court, the power of a bankruptcy court to appoint a receiver is not restricted.¹¹⁵ This is apparent when it is considered that an assignment for creditors within the four months period is an act of bankruptcy and when made the basis of involuntary proceedings, the property assigned immediately becomes subject to administration in bankruptcy.¹¹⁶ The court may, in its discretion, recognize the assignee for the purpose of preserving the alleged bankrupt's estate, or appoint a receiver, if the circumstances warrant it, and may restrain the assignee from administering the estate.¹¹⁷

(4) EFFECT OF APPOINTMENT.— Coincident with the filing of a petition the court acquires control of the property of the alleged bankrupt, and to properly exercise this control, it is thereupon vested, under the subdivisions

115. Appointment of receiver after qualification of assignee for benefit of creditors.— The power of the bankruptcy court to appoint a receiver is not affected by the fact that an assignment for the benefit of creditors has been executed and that the assignee named therein has qualified. Whether to appoint a receiver in a given case is a matter for the exercise of a proper discretion, and depending upon the question whether the assignee is a proper custodian of the property during the period between the filing of the petition and the election of a trustee. Matter of Federal Mail & Express

R. 240, 233 Fed. 691, holding that in all cases where a petition in bankruptcy has been filed within four months of making a general assignment, the bankruptcy court has both the power and the absolute discretion to restrain the assignee from administering the estate. See Am. B. R. Digest, § 935.

Intervention by creditors.— If creditors have accepted a deed of trust or general assignment for the benefit of creditors and the trustee or assignee therein is a party to or bound by the proceedings wherein such assignment is declared to be void, the creditors are without sufficient equity to justify their subsequent intervention to have the order made in such proceeding set aside. Matter of Dashiell (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 40 Am. B. R. 649, 246 Fed. 366.

above referred to, with full power to designate officers of the court, either a receiver or marshal, to preserve such property, to the end that the interests of the creditors may be protected.¹¹⁸ The power to appoint a receiver, where the court has acquired jurisdiction of the parties, is not affected by the fact that the respondent, a corporation, was not subject to adjudication as a bankrupt.¹¹⁹ It seems that if a receiver is appointed in an involuntary case, before adjudication, he must give a bond.¹²⁰ The official status or regularity of appointment of a receiver is not subject to collateral attack.¹²¹

c. Practice on appointment.—(1) APPLICATION.—Before reference of the bankruptcy proceeding, the application for a receiver should be made to the judge; after that time to the referee.¹²² The application should state facts showing that a receiver is absolutely necessary for the preservation of the estate,¹²³ and should be accompanied by a bond as required by § 3-e of the bankruptcy act.¹²⁴ The application may be on affidavits of parties in interest, showing the requisite facts. A petition which fails to allege or is not accompanied by affidavits showing that the appointment is absolutely necessary for the preservation of the estate is insufficient.¹²⁵ The proceedings for the Effect of appointment on right to acquire lien.—An order of the bankruptcy court appointing a general receiver of the bankrupt's entire estate, directing the delivery of such estate to him as far as possible by the bankrupt, and enjoining all other persons from transferring or otherwise interfering with the property, assets and effects of the bankrupt, effects a sequestration of the bankrupt's estate to such an extent as to prevent the acquisition of any new lien thereon. *Agnew v. Bond required upon appointment.—It is the evident purpose of section 3-e of the Bankruptcy Act, requiring a bond by an applicant for the appointment of a receiver, to protect the alleged bankrupt from all costs, expenses, and damages incident to the seizure of his property, not only up to the time of appeal, if there be an appeal, but until final adjudication or an order of the court turning back the property. If no bond should be given under said section, or if a bond be given and it proves to be inadequate the applicant for the appointment of the receiver would still be liable, and, independent of the bond, he could be compelled to pay the costs and expenses of the receivership. Upon the appointment of a receiver on the application of a creditor the alleged bankrupt can be identified only by a bond executed pursuant to section 3-e of the Bankruptcy Act and he must resort to this to recover his damages and expenses upon the discharge of the receiver. But, if it appears to the alleged bankrupt that the bond is inadequate, he may apply to the court to require the creditor to give an additional and sufficient bond. *Hill Co. v. U. S. Sufficiency of petition.—It is not enough to allege the necessity for the appointment of a receiver in the language of the statute, but the moving papers must set forth the specific facts which reasonably establish such necessity. Matter of Hargadine-McKittick, etc., Co. (D. C., Mo.), 39 Am. B. R. 142, 239 Fed. 155.

appointment of a receiver are not a part of the proceedings for adjudication but are ancillary thereto; the application for a receiver should therefore be separate.¹²⁹ The law does not authorize an application by the attorney of the creditors. The analogy of the statute suggests that it be accompanied with a consent, signed by a goodly number of creditors, and a request that a named person be appointed; or, if not so accompanied, the appointment may be withheld until the wishes of creditors can be ascertained. The Bankruptcy Act does not limit the right to apply for the appointment of a receiver to any one or more of the petitioning creditors, but provides that any party in interest may make application for such appointment. This necessarily includes any creditor who has a provable debt against the bankrupt that would be affected by his discharge, whether he be one of the petitioning creditors or not.¹²⁷

(2) NOTICE OF APPLICATION.—Notice of the application for the appointment of a receiver is proper; the statute does not expressly require it, but it should be given except in rare cases, where it is apparent that irreparable loss or injury is threatened or that notice might defeat the very purpose of the receivership.¹²⁸ An appointment without notice is not in a constitutional sense a deprivation of property without due process of law.¹²⁹

(3) ORDER OF APPOINTMENT.—Whether a receiver should be appointed is a judicial question to be determined by the court; its determination may not be compelled by mandamus.¹³⁰ The order of appointment should fix the amount of the receiver's bond, and distinctly specify his powers and duties. Should he find the order insufficient, he may, of course, apply for modifications, fixing or increasing his powers. He should be ready at the first meeting of creditors with a report and account, which should then be audited and his allowance fixed; whereupon he should turn over the property to the trustee. This pro-

126. Receivership proceedings ancillary to bankruptcy proceedings.—It is apparent from a consideration of the provisions of the bankruptcy act that a petition for adjudication and an application for the appointment of a receiver are separate and distinct, and that the receivership proceedings are but ancillary to the proceedings in bankruptcy. Hill Co. v. U. S. Fidelity Co. (Sup. Ct., Ill.), 265 Ill. 534, 33 Am. B. R. 781, 107 N. E. 194.

129. Due process of law.—In the case of Latimer v. McNeal (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 16 Am. B. R. 43, 142 Fed. 451, the court said: "Now, as respects the matter of notice, it will be observed that the Bankrupt Act does not expressly require notice to be given the bankrupt before the appointment of a receiver, under the provision quoted. Such appointment, moreover, does not deprive the bankrupt of his property without due process of law, for the appointment is essentially for the temporary custody of his property with a view to its preservation. Furthermore there occur well-recognized instances of such urgency as to dispense with notice; as where irreparable loss or injury is impending, or where notice might defeat the very purpose of the receivership. We are, indeed, of the opinion that except in rare cases a receiver ought never to be appointed without notice to the alleged bankrupt."

Ancillary appointment.—A bankruptcy court in the district other than that in which the bankruptcy proceedings are pending has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver of the property of the alleged bankrupt, except upon motion in open court upon such notice to the persons in the actual possession of property so located and to those otherwise interested, as will in the circumstances constitute due process of law, as required by the constitution of the United States. *Ross-Meehan Foundry Co. v. cedure rests on custom and the analogy of the administrative features of the statute, rather than on the law or the rules of the courts.¹³¹

d. Powers of receiver.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The powers of the receiver will depend on the purpose for which he is appointed. They are limited by the powers specified in the order of appointment,¹³² or by the jurisdiction, directly or otherwise, of the court which appoints him.¹³³ If appointed for the preservation of the bankrupt estate under authority of § 2 (3), he becomes a mere custodian. He may take custody of whatever is plainly the property of the bankrupt, and against which no third party makes any claim with color of title.¹³⁴ He is a statutory receiver and possesses the powers conferred upon him by the statute, or such as may necessarily be implied from the powers so conferred.¹³⁵

(2) SALE OF PROPERTY BY RECEIVER.—When appointed for the preservation of the estate the court may, for cause, order a sale of the property in his possession,¹³⁶ if it appear that the property be of a perishable nature and sale

131. Where a marshal is required to seize and take possession of the property of the alleged bankrupt the special warrant to him should be in the form prescribed in official forms in bankruptcy number 8; the bond of the marshal is prescribed by form number 10. These forms do not apply to receivers. In supplementary forms numbers 101-104 are found petition and orders for the appointment of receivers before and after adjudication. These will be found useful in practice in receiverships. See also Hagar & Alexanders' Forms on Bankruptcy (2nd Ed.), Nos. 52, 53, 58, 59.

Vacating receivership.—While the questions presented by the creditors' petition and the alleged bankrupt corporation's answer remain undetermined, and there is nothing to indicate that its assignee for creditors was not an honest, capable and responsible man, in whose hands the property of the estate was entirely safe, an ex parte order appointing a receiver granted upon the filing of the petition in bankruptcy will be reversed with costs and the receivership vacated. Matter of Oakland Lumber Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 23 Am. B. R. 181, 174 Fed. 634. To the same effect is the case of In re Desroschers (D. C., N. Y.), 25 Am. B. R. 703, 183 Fed. 991.

134. In re Michaelis & Lindeman (D. C., N. Y.), 27 Am. B. R. 299, 196 Fed. 718.

135. "A statutory receiver is one appointed in pursuance of special statutory provisions. He derives his power from the statute, and to it must look for the duty imposed on him. He possesses such power only as the statute confers, or such as may be fairly inferred from the general scope of the law of his appointment. We are therefore referred to the Bankruptcy Act to ascertain the powers of the bankruptcy court to appoint a receiver and the extent of the power which the act confers upon him.

"* * * It plainly was not contemplated that the receiver or the marshal so designated should supersede the trustee, or exercise the general powers conferred upon a trustee. There is no such power specially conferred or any provisions of the act from which such power can reasonably be implied. Such temporary receiver, whether he be a marshal or another, is not a trustee for the creditors, but is a caretaker and custodian of the visible property pending adjudication and until a selection of a trustee. If in any sense a trustee, he is trustee for the bankrupt, in whom is the title to the property until it passes by operation of law as of the date of adjudication to the trustee selected by the creditors. The duty required and the power conferred clearly are that the receiver or marshal shall take possession of property that would otherwise go to waste, and hold it and preserve it so that it might come to the trustee, when selected, without needless injury." Boonville Nat. Bank v. Blakey (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 6 Am. B. R. 13, 107 Fed. 891.

After an adjudication in bankruptcy a receiver is no longer merely a custodian of property which may be ordered returned to the alleged bankrupt, but of property which is then in the course of administration. In addition to the duties devolving upon him as a preserver of property actually in his possession, he is a proper person, pending the appointment of a trustee, to carry out any orders which the court may make for the enforcement of the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act. Matter of Gottlieb (D. C., N. Y.), 40 Am. B. R. 247, 245 Fed. 139.

thereof is necessary in order to preserve it.¹³⁷ But it must be remembered that pending and prior to an adjudication the property of the bankrupt still belongs to him, and title thereto only vests in the trustee after an adjudication has been obtained.¹³⁸ The importance of the question as to whether a sale by a receiver so appointed may be ordered is lessened, when it is considered that the court may direct a trustee when appointed to ratify a sale so made by the receiver.¹³⁹ General Order XVII provides for an order, upon the petition of a receiver directing him to sell part or the whole of the bankrupt's estate, if the same is perishable, and it appears that there will be loss if it is not sold immediately.¹⁴⁰ If there is any irregularity in a sale by a receiver the remedy is in the bankruptcy court upon the application of the trustee or of a creditor. It cannot be attacked by one who was not a creditor of the estate in an action against the alleged purchaser.^{140a}

(3) SUITS BY RECEIVER.—The question has also arisen as to whether a receiver before adjudication may be permitted to bring suit for the recovery of the property of the bankrupt not in his possession. The weight of authority is against the right of a receiver to sue to recover such property.¹⁴¹ But it has been held in a well-considered case that where property has been fraudulently and illegally transferred by a bankrupt within the four months period, the court may, acting under authority of § 2 (3), appoint a receiver of such property, since by the terms of the act¹⁴² such transfer was declared null and void and the property involved to be the property of the bankrupt.¹⁴³ In this and similar cases it was assumed that the court in the exercise of its equity jurisdiction could protect the rights of creditors by the appointment of a receiver, by injunction or any other appropriate remedy.¹⁴⁴ It is suggested that if the receiver is appointed "for the preservation of the estate," under the statute, his powers must be restricted, necessarily, to suits respecting property in the possession or which should have been in the possession of the

137. Sale for preservation.—In the case of In re Kelly Dry Goods Co. (D. C., Wis.), 4 Am. B. R. 528, 102 Fed. 747, it was held that as a general rule no order of sale should be made until after adjudication unless the property is of such a nature that a sale is necessary to preserve its value.

Perishable property.—In the case of In re Garner & Co. (D. C., Ala.), 18 Am. B. R. 733, 135 Fed. 914, and In re Harris (D. C., Ala.), 19 Am. B. Filing petition to recover moneys fraudulently held.—It is the duty of a receiver to bankrupt, and constitute the corpus of the estate. The recovery of property fraudulently or preferentially transferred is a function of the trustee, and ordinarily will be left to him. In any event a receiver may not be authorized to sue in a district other than the one in which he is appointed,¹⁴⁵ but an ancillary receiver may be appointed to aid in protecting the assets in any district pending the selection of a trustee.¹⁴⁶ Where the circumstances are such that it would be impossible for a receiver to apply to the court of his appointment to enforce the delivery of property belonging to the estate which might be dissipated and the estate suffer an irreparable loss, he may maintain a suit for its protection in any district where the property may be.¹⁴⁷ If property is wrongfully taken from a receiver he must retake it or recover the damages for the conversion and account therefor to the court.^{147a}

e. Possession by receiver.—(1) CUSTODIAN OF PROPERTY.—A receiver appointed under this section for the "preservation of the estate," is merely a custodian of the property of the alleged bankrupt, until the question of bankruptcy is adjudicated.¹⁴⁸ He takes no title to the property.¹⁴⁹

(2) PROPERTY CLAIMED ADVERSELY.—In the interim between Supreme Court decisions in *Bardes v. Bank*¹⁵⁰ and Bryan v. Bernheimer,¹⁵¹ it was generally conceded that receivers had not power to take possession of property claimed adversely, even if to act only as custodians. Since the latter case, however, the lower courts have been confirmed in their earlier opinions that the district court had power to direct receivers or the marshals to seize and hold the property of the bankrupt wherever found; this is something very different from a summary settlement of a controversy as to the title of property so seized, which must usually be by plenary suit.¹⁵² But, though such jurisdiction exists, it will rarely be exercised.¹⁵³ An injunction, either in the proceeding,¹⁵⁴ or in an ancillary action in equity to prevent the adverse claimant from disposing of the property,¹⁵⁵ will usually be enough. Nor should courts of bankruptcy, through their receivers, seize property claimed adversely and already in the custody of a State court; comity requires that the first court obtaining jurisdiction shall retain it until ousted by its consent.¹⁵⁶ Thus, though there is ample jurisdiction to take possession of such property, the trustee should always apply to the State court in the first instance.¹⁵⁷ If a

f. Suits against receivers.—The Judicial Code provides in substance that a receiver appointed in a Federal court may be sued without leave of the court "in respect to any act or transaction of his in carrying on the business connected with" the property in his charge.¹⁶⁰ It has been held that this provision applies to receivers appointed in bankruptcy proceedings as well as other Federal receivers.¹⁶¹ If the action is not based "on an act or transaction in carrying on the business" of the receiver it may properly be stayed if not brought with leave of the court.¹⁶² A receiver may not defend, compromise or adjust claims against the estate of the bankrupt.¹⁶³ An action in a State court against a receiver upon an agreement which pertains to the preservation of the estate, or business connected therewith, may not be stayed by an order of the bankruptcy court.¹⁶⁴

R. 746, 183 Fed. 787, the court said: "Receivers, prior to adjudication, are in no condition to adjust claims, liquidated or unliquidated, and have no power. They may not compromise claims or admit or reject them. They cannot properly defend, or, if they do, cannot act intelligently, as their office is of short duration, and their province is to care for and protect or preserve the property, not defend suits. In short, the act contemplates that all claims against the bankrupt, which are provable—and this is a provable claim—shall be proved and presented to the referee or court with such proof and then be allowed or disallowed and liquidated, if unliquidated, as directed by the referee or the court. Section 63. All pending suits against a bankrupt are to be stayed. Section 11. This section clearly indicates that suits against a bankrupt and the receivers are not to be authorized by the court in any event and not against any one prior to the appointment of a trustee who is to represent the creditors. Even then claims in controversy are not to be settled or liquidated by suit in the State courts unless the judge or referee so directs. This claim arises on a contract made by the alleged bankrupt, and is a claim against the bankrupt, and is not a claim against the receivers for some act or omission of theirs."

Reasonable compensation.—Upon the ad-formed within the scope of his authority; he may not receive compensation for activities not authorized.¹⁶⁶ Where a receiver has been negligent in the performance of his duties, the court may, in a proper case, deny him any commissions.¹⁶⁷

(2) EFFECT OF AMENDMENT OF 1910.— Clause 5 of section 2, and section 48 of the bankruptcy act have been amended by the amendatory act of 1910 so that the discretion of the court in allowing additional compensation is limited by fixing the maximum commissions to be allowed receivers (1) for services rendered by them when appointed under § 2 (3) to take charge of and preserve the property of the alleged bankrupt, and (2) for services rendered by them in conducting the business of the bankrupt.¹⁶⁸ Some of the cases variously construing the act of 1903 amending § 2 (5) are cited in the foot-note.¹⁶⁹ These cases are not controlling under the law as amended by the amendatory act of 1910. The words added to subd. 5 by the act of 1903, "but not at a greater rate than in this act allowed trustees for similar services," were omitted by the amendment of 1910; they were held to be a limitation on the discretion of the court so far as they related to compensation allowed for continuing a going business. In such cases receivers are not entitled to greater allowances than the percentages fixed by § 48-a on moneys disbursed by trustees,¹⁷⁰ but where receivers have carried on the business of the bankrupt with skill and success they may be allowed the maximum compensation allowed to trustees under that section.¹⁷¹ The amount specified is not intended as a ministration of assets subject to specific liens, reasonable compensation, not, however, in excess of the allowances made by the Bankruptcy Act, should be allowed to receivers, if appointed. Matter of Rauch (D. C., Va.), 36 Am. B. R. 75, 226 Fed. 982.

Compensation where receivers are changed by adjudication in another district.—Where, by order of the court in the Southern District of New York, the business of an alleged bankrupt was continued by the receiver and, pending the adjudication, the debtor was adjudicated a bankrupt in the Eastern District of New York and receivers appointed, and the adjudication previously made in the Southern District was vacated, by an order directing that all property held by the Southern District receivers be turned over to the Eastern District receivers, the court in the Southern District has jurisdiction to determine what is a proper compensation for its receivers, who actually continued the business for five days. Matter of Isaacson (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 23 Am. B. R. 98, 174 Fed. 406.

169. Effect of amendment of 1903.—In re Kirkpatrick (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 17 Am. B. R. 594, 148 Fed. 811, in which case the court held that the amendment to § 2 (5) had reference to services rendered by a re-

R. 178, 151 Fed. 780. In the case of In re Cambridge Lumber Co., 14 Am. B. R. 581, 127 Fed. 772, it seems to have been inferred that the amendment limited the exercise of the court's discretion in fixing the compensation to that allowed to trustees. In the case of In re Sully (D. C., N. Y.), 13 Am. B. R. 22, 133 Fed. 997, which arose subsequent to the amendment of 1903, a compensation much larger than that allowed to trustees was awarded to receivers who had rendered valuable services by collecting a large sum for the estate, which the judge thought was due to the experience and skill of the receivers. See In re Falkenberg (D. C., New Mex.), 30 Am. B. R. 718, 206 Fed. 835.

fixed and invariable amount, to be awarded in all cases; the rate fixed should be determined in accordance with the value of the services rendered.¹⁷³

(3) How PAYABLE.—Petitioning creditors in case of a receiver in involuntary proceedings may be charged with the compensation of the receiver, and the cost and expenses of the receivership.¹⁷³ A receiver may be allowed compensation and the expenses of the receivership out of the assets, though the court, on dismissal of the proceedings, may ultimately charge such expenses in whole or in part against the petitioning creditors.¹⁷⁴ As a general rule where the estate is benefited by the receivership, and an adjudication is had, the compensation and expenses of the receiver should be paid from the fund.¹⁷⁵

h. Damages from receivership.—A complaint or petition by the trustee in bankruptcy addressed to the bankruptcy court in the exercise of its equity powers, asking an accounting for the damages, caused to the estate by the improvident appointment of a receiver is not beyond the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, nor does it violate any right to a jury trial.^{176a}

V. CONTINUANCE OF A GOING BUSINESS.

a. In general.—Section 2 (5) permits the court to authorize the business of a bankrupt to be conducted for a limited period by a receiver or marshal, or by the trustee when appointed. This is a power inherently belonging to the court independent of the statute. The chief function of a bankruptcy law is to distribute an insolvent's assets pro rata; this implies the power to marshal those assets. In ordinary cases, a court of bankruptcy will go no further. Yet occasion will often arise where a going business may be preserved and advantageously sold by keeping it alive under the management of the trustee. By this supervision, courts of bankruptcy are vested with

When receiver not "mere custodian."—A receiver who takes charge of a stock of goods and later sells them for more than their appraised value is more than a "mere custodian," and is entitled to compensation within the limits fixed by the general provisions of section 48-d, that is, not exceeding six per cent. of the first five hundred dollars, etc. Matter of Ginsburg (D. C. Tenn.), 31 Am. B. R. 240, 208 Fed. 160; service rendered by receivers examined and allowance by referee reduced. Matter of Mills Tea & Butter Co. (D. C. Mass.), 37 Am. B. R. 148, 235 Fed. 813. See Am. B. R. Digest, § 308.

If a composition is offered after the appointment of a trustee, a receiver, having completely earned his compensation, is entitled to such amount as the court may see fit to allow, up to the regular percentage. Matter of Miller (D. C. N. Y.), 40 Am. B. R. 155, 243 Fed. 242. If a receiver has already accounted, and his allowance has been fixed (and possibly paid) before composition is offered, the mere confirmation of the composition while the estate is in the hands of the trustee is not sufficient to revert back and reduce the receiver's allowance, nor can he be compelled to restore any of that already paid. Matter of Miller (D. C. N. Y.), 40 Am. B. R. 155, 243 Fed. 242.

Payment by petitioning creditors.—In the case of Matter of Aschenbach Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 502, 183 Fed. 305, the proceedings were dismissed and the court held that where a receiver in bankruptcy has been appointed to conduct an alleged bankrupt's business pending its adjudication as an involuntary bankrupt, and the petition for adjudication is subsequently dismissed and the receivership vacated, the bankruptcy court has the discretion to assess the receiver's fees and other expenses in the first instance against the petitioning creditors instead of directing their payment first out of the property in his hands. But in the case of In re Metals Extraction & Refining Co. (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 27 Am. B. R. 11, 193 Fed. 172, it was held that the petitioning creditors should not be charged with the costs of the receivership unless the proceedings had been instituted without reasonable cause or in bad faith.

Payment by petitioning creditors.—Where the entire estate of the bankrupt came into the hands of the receiver appointed to carry on the business, and remained there until it was turned over to the trustee, and the bankrupt practically consented to the appointment, and no creditor or lien holder ever objected, and it appears that the order appointing the receiver was improvident and should be vacated, the creditors petitioning for the receivership cannot be held directly liable for the debts incurred by the receiver with consent of the court. Matter of Veler (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 41 Am. B. R. 736, 249 Fed. 633.

175. Payment of compensation out of estate.—In the case of Matter of Wentworth Lunch Co. (Ref. N. Y.), 25 Am. B. R. 612, 189 Fed. 831, Referee Dexter states the rules as follows: "It is a general rule of equity that the compensation and expenses of the receiver are payable out of the fund. The receiver does not act as the agent for either of the parties, but as ample power to that end.^{175b} A referee should not exercise the power on the initiative of the trustee to carry into effect the unexecuted contracts of the bankrupt; nor should it be exercised for the benefit of general creditors at the expense of secured creditors who do not consent thereto.¹⁷⁶ A secured creditor's security may not be diminished by any expense of administration or operation of the business, unless such creditor has sought or acquiesced in the order continuing such operation.¹⁷⁷ When an order is made authorizing the continuance of the business it may not be attacked collaterally.¹⁷⁸

b. Limited period.—The business may be continued for a "limited period." These words are intended to indicate that the time should not be protracted, and that the receiver or trustee should use due diligence in bringing the active business affairs of the bankrupt to a speedy termination.¹⁷⁹

c. Contracting indebtedness.—A receiver who is authorized to conduct a business, for the successful conduct of which it is necessary and customary to receive credit and borrow money, has the implied power to purchase on credit and even to borrow money; where the power is expressly conferred by the court the limitations imposed must be observed.¹⁸⁰ Where receivers authorized to continue the business of the bankrupt go beyond the extent of their authority to contract indebtedness, the indebtedness so contracted is not a prior lien upon the assets of the bankrupt. It is the duty of those dealing with receivers in such cases to inquire as to the extent of their authority, and the orders of the court in respect to their powers will be regarded as notice to all persons.¹⁸¹

d. Conduct of business.—The conducting of daily auction sales by the trustee of the bankrupt's goods in his stores may be considered in effect as the continuance of business by the trustee for the purpose of allowing additional Modification of order to borrow money and continue business.—An application by an alleged bondholder of a bankrupt corporation for the modification of an order authorizing the receiver to borrow money and continue the business should not be passed upon by the court where the petitioner's ownership of the bonds is denied; such issue should be first settled by referring it to a special master. Matter of Consumer's, etc., Brewing Co. (D. Unauthorized loans.—In the case of In re Burkhalter & Co. (D. C., Ala.), 25 Am. B. R. 378, 182 Fed. 353, the court held that where a bank, without authority of court, undertook to charge against funds of the bankrupt estate, deposited with it by the receiver, notes on which it had advanced money to the receiver in excess of the amount which he was authorized to borrow, it did so wrongfully, because it had no right to appropriate the trust funds to unauthorized loans, until it had been determined by the court that the proceeds of the loans had been used by the receiver for the benefit of the trust estate and because it thereby preferred a claim which was entitled to no preference.

Liability of trustee.—A trustee of a bankrupt contractor, who has not been authorized by order of the court to continue the business, is not liable, in his representative capacity, for injuries to an adjoining landowner inflicted in the course of construction work. It seems, that the trustee is liable personally. McAuley v. Jackson, 34 Am. B. R. 371, 165 N. Y. App. Div. 846.

compensation.¹⁸² A receiver should not be surcharged for losses or sales during the continuance of the business,¹⁸³ except, possibly, where by improper methods of conducting the business, losses have accrued.¹⁸⁴ Where a receiver is in possession of leased premises for the purpose of continuing the business, he should pay the pro rata rent at a reasonable value.¹⁸⁵ A garnishment against the wages of an employee of the bankrupt, is not effective against the trustee who continues the business unless the order has been served on him.¹⁸⁶

e. Compensation of receiver or trustee.—Section 48 of the act was amended by the act of 1910 so as to limit the amount which may be paid to trustees, marshals or receivers for services performed by them in the conduct of the business of the bankrupt. The ordinary fees of trustees and receivers and marshals are fixed by subdivisions a and d of such section 48. The fees allowed for the continuance of the business of the bankrupt are in addition to such compensation. The maximum amount of such additional compensation is six per centum on the first $500 or less, four per centum on moneys in excess of $500 and less than $1,500, two per centum on moneys in excess of $1,500 and less than $10,000, and one per centum on moneys in excess of $10,000.¹⁸⁷ The compensation of a trustee for continuing a going business was, prior to the amendment of 1903, based upon moneys received and paid out rather than work done.¹⁸⁸ It was held that under § 48-a as amended by the act of 1903 an additional allowance might be made to a trustee where he had performed services of value in respect to the bankrupt's business and had thus materially

Purpose of amendment of 1910.—The report of the Senate judiciary committee of the 61st Congress (Rep. No. 691) contains the following statement as to the purpose and effect of the amendment to § 48 of the act relative to compensation of trustees, receivers or marshals in conducting the business of the bankrupt: "The present amendment fixes the maximum compensation that can be allowed receivers for the performance of the ordinary duties at precisely this same rate (the rate allowed trustees under § 48-a) instead of leaving it to the unlimited discretion of the court. It also fixes the extra compensation, whether it be to the receiver or trustee, for the conducting of the business, to once again this same rate; so that at best, the ordinary and extraordinary compensation taken together, in the event that both a receiver and trustee have successively had charge of the estate, and even have both conducted the business, cannot exceed four times the amount allowable to a trustee by § 48-a of the act for the performance of his ordinary duties. The practical difficulty in the way of allowing commissions to receivers, where the receivers turn over to the trustee in specie the property which they have been taking care of, is obviated by the provision that the commissions are to be figured upon the amounts thereafter actually realized upon sale of such property so turned over in specie. Thus the bill seeks to reduce to the one rational basis of commissions, on moneys actually realized, the compensation, both ordinary and extraordinary, of both trustee and receiver; and by this is done away with also the unlimited discretion of the courts in the allowance of compensation to such officers. Of course the rates of commission prescribed are maximum limitations. Less but not more may be allowed, and it is hoped the courts will exercise their discretion still in allowing less amounts where proper."

increased the bankrupt's estate.¹⁸⁹ The amendatory act of 1910 amending § 2 (5) and § 48 has finally disposed of the entire question as to the allowances to be made to trustees and receivers for continuing the business of the bankrupt by prescribing the maximum amount which may be allowed such officers for such services. Where the receiver was more than a "mere custodian," performing valuable services to the estate, although not "conducting the business" within the meaning of § 48, he should be compensated by a reasonable amount for the services rendered.¹⁹⁰

VI. PUNISHMENT FOR CRIME; ENFORCEMENT OF OBEDIENCE TO LAWFUL ORDERS.

a. In general.—By subdivisions 4, 13 and 16 of § 2 a court of bankruptcy is clothed with ample power to punish violations of the bankruptcy act, to enforce obedience to the lawful orders issued thereunder and to punish persons for contempts committed in a bankruptcy proceeding. They are among the most important powers possessed by courts of bankruptcy and are essential for the proper carrying into effect of the provisions of the act. Other sections of the act relate to these powers and provide more in detail for the exercise thereof.

b. Punishment for violations of the act.—Subdivision 4 authorizes a court of bankruptcy to punish bankrupts, officers and other persons, including the agents, officers and directors of corporations, for violations of any provisions of the bankruptcy act. Section 29, post, specifies certain offenses and prescribes the punishment therefor. These specific offenses and the procedure required for the punishment thereof will be considered under that section. If an offense consists of a violation of the act not included in those specified in § 29, subd. 4 of § 2 confers the power of punishment. As to the right to a jury trial reference should also be made to § 19-a, post.

c. Enforcement of obedience to lawful orders.—The power to enforce obedience to its lawful orders is inherent in every court. Being clothed with power to make such orders as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the act, it must possess the powers essential to enforce such orders.¹⁹¹ The act recognizes the power of the court to punish as for contempt any person who disregards its lawful orders. The exercise of the power is discretionary but cannot be invoked in any case unless the order is a lawful one.¹⁹²

VII. PUNISHMENT FOR CONTEMPT.

a. In general.—The power to punish for contempt committed before referees is expressly conferred by subd. 16 of this section. Section 41 of the

190. Valuable service rendered by receiver.—A receiver appointed to take charge of and preserve the bankrupt's assets pending the election and qualification of the trustee or until the dismissal of the petition, who, instead of merely holding possession of the accounts and bills receivable and the personal property, collected many of the accounts, pending the election of the trustee, and thereby saved to the estate a considerable sum of money, was more than a "mere custodian," but was not "conducting of the business," within the meaning of section 48 the Bankruptcy Act, and should be compensated by a reasonable amount for the services rendered. Matter of Metropolitan Motor Car Co. (D. C., Wash.), 35 Am. B. R. 539, 225 Fed. 274.

Compensation for acting for bankrupt.—A receiver, when acting for the bankrupt in conducting his business after an offer of composition, should be paid only in a corresponding way to what he would be paid if he were acting for the benefit of the estate. Matter of Miller (D. C., N. Y.), 40 Am. B. R. 155, 243 Fed. 242.

act specifies in detail the acts which constitute contempts before the referee, and prescribes the practice essential to secure punishment. The detailed discussion of contempts and their punishment is more appropriately placed under that section. Reference should be made to such section for a further consideration of this subject. We will confine ourselves at this point with the enunciation of general principles pertaining directly to the exercise by a court of bankruptcy of the power to punish a contempt. As already indicated the court has power under § 2 (13) to punish by fine or imprisonment any violation of a lawful order issued by it. This confers upon the court ample power in contempt proceedings. The power to punish for contempt in bankruptcy proceedings has always been recognized.¹⁹³ In many cases, as where the bankrupt or another contumaciously keeps property belonging to the estate in his possession, it is essential to the proper administration of the act. The proceeding is quasi-criminal, yet not one entitling the person proceeded against to a trial by jury.¹⁹⁴ The power to punish for contempt is a judicial one and cannot be referred or delegated.¹⁹⁵

b. Imprisonment for debt; constitutionality.—The power to imprison for contempt is not an infringement of the constitutional prohibition on imprisonment for debt; but a bankrupt cannot be imprisoned indefinitely for a contempt.¹⁹⁶ The constitutional provision here referred to is that contained in the constitutions of many of the States to the effect that no person shall be imprisoned for debt in any civil action unless in case of fraud. Where the

They were included in every bankruptcy act and similar provisions have been enacted by almost every state in the Union, including the state of Arkansas. In proceedings supplemental to or in aid of executions, courts are authorized by these statutes to enforce the surrender of assets subject to execution, and for this purpose may commit to jail any person refusing to comply with such order."

Enforcement of contempt order; imprisonment for debt.—Where the record in contempt proceedings shows that a bankrupt, who has been ordered to turn over property to his trustee, has neither possession of the property nor ability to comply with the order, he cannot be legally punished for contempt; and if, in such case, notwithstanding his inability, the court orders the bankrupt committed for failure to obey, such order has no justification as a contempt proceeding, but, having no purpose except to force by imprisonment the payment of money on debts, it amounts to an imprisonment for debt. In re Purvine, 2 Am. order of the court directs the surrender to the proper officer of property in respect to which the court has jurisdiction, the obligation and duty of the person to whom it is directed to surrender cannot be converted into a debt by his mere refusal to comply with the order.¹⁹⁷ The commitment for disobedience of an order directing that property belonging to the bankrupt's estate be delivered to the trustee, is not a punishment for non-payment of a debt. There is no debt due the trustee. The punishment is inflicted for failure to perform a legal duty.¹⁹⁸

c. When proceedings will lie.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The power of commitment should be cautiously exercised and only when its propriety is beyond a reasonable doubt; it should appear from the facts in the case that there has been a wilful disobedience of the order.¹⁹⁹ It should not be exercised to compel the payment of a debt, or to punish for a fraudulent transfer.²⁰⁰ There should be clear and convincing proof amounting at least to a fair preponderance of evidence, that the person charged with the contempt is guilty thereof.²⁰¹

Power exercised with caution.—In the case of Samel v. Dodd (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 16 Am. B. R. 163, 142 Fed. 68, the court said: "While bankruptcy courts are vested with power to require bankrupts to surrender their property, and to enforce obedience to the order by attachment for contempt, yet the power is 'far reaching and drastic and should be exercised with cautious discretion.' Indeed, it may be said that it should never be exercised except in a plain case, and always with a due regard to the constitutional rights of the citizen. . . . It is objected, however, that the failure of the courts to exercise with a firm hand the power to punish, by contempt proceedings, designing and unscrupulous bankrupts, would practically deprive the law of its efficacy and convert it into a mere shield for the protection of dishonest debtors. In doubtful cases the power should not be exercised; and in view of the stringent provisions of law punishing fraudulent conduct, and other forms of dishonesty, on the part of the bankrupt, the objection is untenable. The original act not only contains ample provisions for the punishment of the bankrupt in the regular mode of trial by jury, for false swearing and for the fraudulent disposition of assets (§ 29), but section 14, as amended by the act of 1903 renders it extremely difficult, if not impossible, for the contumacious or dishonest bankrupt to secure a discharge from his indebtedness."

(2) POSSIBILITY OF PERFORMANCE.—It should not be sought by proceedings for contempt to compel a person to do that which he has no power to do. If it is sought to compel the bankrupt to surrender to the trustee property belonging to the estate it must appear that such property is in the actual control or possession of the bankrupt and that it is possible for him to surrender it.²⁰² This fact should be established by clear and convincing proof,—by a fair preponderance of evidence, and in some cases it has been held that the evidence must be sufficient to satisfy the mind beyond a reasonable doubt.²⁰³ If the bankrupt denies under oath that he has the money or property in his possession, he should not be punished by commitment unless it is shown beyond a reasonable doubt that he is able to produce the same.²⁰⁴

His answer is not conclusive, but the rule in such cases requires that the denial be overcome by evidence proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the bankrupt actually has the present possession or control of money, or that any alleged transfer or other disposition of it is a mere subterfuge which does not prevent him from producing it." 19, 129 Fed. 502, the court said: "The court has no doubt of the power of the court, where it reasonably appears that the bankrupt has the money in his possession or under his control, to compel him to pay it over; but that fact must appear by something more substantial than mere presumptions or inferences taken from such circumstances as those which have been proven in this case. To invoke that power requires something like incontestable proof as against the bankrupt's denial that he has the money."

Denial of possession insufficient.—Where the evidence shows that at or shortly before his adjudication, certain goods or their value were in bankrupt's possession, they will be presumed to have remained in his possession, or under his control, until their disposition or disappearance is satisfactorily accounted for; and his sworn denial that he is in the possession of the goods or money, is insufficient. *Kirmer v. Control of property.—Where it appears that money in the bank was taken by the bankrupt after a petition in involuntary bankruptcy was filed, but before adjudication, and it does not seem probable that the money was expended for the support of his family, it will be held to be under his control and he may be adjudged in contempt for failure to turn it over to his trustee. In re Kane (D. property is beyond the present control of the bankrupt and in the hands of third parties claiming title derived prior to the proceedings in bankruptcy, the court may not punish either of them for contempt, although the transaction is manifestly fraudulent. In re Mayer (D. C., Wis.), 3 Am. B. R. 533, 98 Fed. 839. It would be different if the property claimed was in the bankrupt's possession. In re DeGottardi (D. C., Cal.), 7 Am. B. R. 723, 144 Fed. 328. Loss of money in gambling is not a sufficient defense. Ripon Knitting Works v. Schreiber (D. C., Wash.), 4 Am. B. R. 299, 101 Fed. 810. Where it appeared that an alleged robbery of stock belonging to a bankrupt merchant never occurred and that such stock is still under his control, the disobedience of an order directing the bankrupt to deliver over the stock to his trustee is a contempt of court. In re Levin (D. C., N. Y.), 6 Am. B. R. 743, 113 Fed. 498.

Present possession.—In the case of In re Barton Bros. (D. C., Ark.), 18 Am. B. R. 98, 149 Fed. 620, the court said: "It is seen by an examination of the decisions last quoted, unless they were in possession of the money at the time the order is made to pay over, the court has no power to make the order." In the case of In re Rosser (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 4 Am. B. R. 153, 101 Fed. 562, it was held that two essential facts condition the lawful exercise of the power to require a bankrupt or other person to pay or deliver to the trustee money or property in his possession: (1) the money or property directed to be delivered to the trustee is a part of the bankrupt estate and (2) that the bankrupt or person ordered to deliver it has it in his possession or under his control at the time the order of delivery is made. Liability of alleged partner.—Where one of the members of a bankrupt partnership was a mere clerk, received what was equivalent to wages, and had nothing to do with the real conduct of the business, and actually turned over all the proceeds of property received a short time before bankruptcy to his partner, and never knew what became of them, he should not be held liable for failure to account for the same. Matter of Vyse (D. R. 849, 158 Fed. 897, it was held that a sheriff who is in possession of property by virtue of a levy will not be adjudged in contempt, where, in good faith and acting under advice of counsel, he refuses to surrender the property upon the demand of the receiver in bankruptcy. R. 342, 97 Fed. 930, in which case the court committed a bankrupt who failed to account for a certain sum of money in his possession which had been directed to be paid to the trustee.

Concealment of property.—The mere fact that the possession and control by the bankrupt is not open and notorious would not prevent his punishment for contempt. A concealment of the property in controversy by the bankrupt and his refusal to disclose may be a contempt, and where the facts are such as to indicate concealment the court may enforce its order to surrender the property by commitment. bankrupt estate traced to the recent possession or control of the bankrupt is presumed to remain there until he satisfactorily accounts to the court for its disposition or disappearance. He cannot escape an order for its surrender by simply adding perjury to fraudulent concealment or misappropriation." See also In re Purvine (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 2 Am. B. Explanation as to money in recent possession, but not scheduled.—Where the bankrupt, a woman, fails to account for a relatively large amount of goods which she had purchased prior to bankruptcy, to keep any books of accounts, and to make any explanation of the great discrepancies in the amount turned over to the trustee and the amount which she should have had on hand, and where the husband and son, who carried on business for her, have testified that they did not appropriate or have the goods or the money, she must either account for this money or pay the penalty by being committed for contempt until she accounts for and turns over to the trustee the sum which, after making all possible allowances in her favor, represents the amount unaccounted for. A bankrupt's willingness to admit that he gambled with everything upon which he could lay his hands does not excuse him from liability to account to his trustee for several thousand dollars in his possession a short time before bankruptcy. Matter of Vyse (D. C., N. Y.) 34 Am. B. R. 378, 220 Fed. 727.

recent control or possession of the bankrupt, is presumed to remain there until he satisfactorily accounts to the court for its disposition or disappearance.²¹² But where the property is not described and the person proceeding against the bankrupt is unable positively to assert that particular property, or a particular sum, has been removed or concealed, contempt proceedings are not justified.²¹³

(4) INSTANCES OF CONTEMPT.—A surrender of property by a bankrupt, after a petition in bankruptcy had been filed, to a secured creditor may be punished as a contempt both on the part of the bankrupt and the creditor.²¹⁴ Likewise a bankrupt is guilty of contempt when, after the filing of an involuntary petition and the service of process, he pays an indebtedness.²¹⁵

The recent possession of goods by a bankrupt, unexplained, is not of itself sufficient to show that he still has them and, therefore, sufficient to prove that he is in contempt in failing to obey an order to produce them, so as to dispense with the necessity of evidence. Stuart v. Reynolds (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 29 Am. B. R. 412, 204 Fed. 709.

The presumption of law, in the absence of satisfactory explanation, is that property traced to the hands of the bankrupt a short time prior to the suspension of business remains in his hands, and the bankrupt must answer therefor. In re Royce Dry Goods Co. (D. C., Mo.), 13 Am. B. R. 257, 266, 133 Fed. 100, citing In re Deuell, 4 Am. B. R. 60, 100 Fed. 633; In re Greenberg (D. C., N. Y.), 5 Am. B. R. 840, 106 Fed. 466; In re McCormick (D. C., N. The fact that a bankrupt had goods or money in his possession at the time of his bankruptcy which he failed to turn over to his trustee does not of itself justify a finding in contempt proceedings, that he had the same goods nearly a year afterwards. Matter of Elias (D. C., N. Car.), 39 Am. B. R. 441, 240 Fed. 448.

Fraudulent disposition of assets.—In the case of In re Shaffer & Stern (D. C., N. Y.), 26 Am. B. R. 54, 185 Fed. 549, it appeared that the firm became bankrupt, and after unsuccessful effort to compromise with the creditors, one of the members of the firm transferred the assets of the firm to a corporation; the corporation did not assume the debts of the firm and subsequently the partner withdrew from the corporation a large sum of money, and it was shown that money belonging to the corporation was in his hands and he failed to account therefor; the stock of the corporation became worthless; it was held that the partner should be compelled to pay to the trustee in bankruptcy of said firm, the amount of money traced into his hands.

Burden of proving disposition.—Where unscheduled property is traced to the recent possession or control of the bankrupt a presumption of fact arises that such property remains there until he satisfactorily accounts for its disposition; a presumption which varies in weight with the circumstances of each case; and the burden is upon the bankrupt to satisfactorily account for its non-production, in assuming which, however, he is entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt because the drastic means of imprisonment for contempt may be invoked to enforce the order to turn over. In re Nisenson (D. C., N. J.), 24 Am. B. R. 915, 182 Fed. 912.

As stated by the court in the case of In re Meier (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 272, 182 Fed. 799: "But the settled rule is that, when property of a bankrupt estate is traced to the possession of one who receives it upon the eve of the bankruptcy of its owner, it is presumed that it remains in his possession or under his control until he satisfactorily accounts to the court of bankruptcy for its disposition or disappearance; that the burden is upon him to satisfactorily so account for it; and that he cannot escape an order for its surrender by simply denying under oath that he has it, or that it is the property of the bankrupt estate. Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 7 Am. B. R. 224 22 Sup. Ct. 269, 46 L. Ed. 405; Boyd v. Glucklich (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 8 Am. B. R. 393, 116 Fed. 135-143, 53 C. C. A. 451; Schweer v. Brown (C. C. ²¹⁵ Matter of Paris Mfg. Co. (D. C., Mo.), 33 Am. B. R. 365, wherein the court said: "It is well established upon authority that the filing of a petition in bankruptcy and the service of process upon the bankrupt, if afterwards followed by an adjudication of

It is probable that any unlawful interference on the part of the bankrupt after adjudication, may be a contempt, although a mere threat to interfere would not be sufficient.²¹⁶ A person who takes and conceals, intentionally, property of the bankrupt in his possession at the time of the adjudication, having no title, lien or colorable claim thereto, will, since the bankruptcy proceeding is injunctive in character, be guilty of unlawful interference with assets in the legal custody of the court, which constitutes a contempt.²¹⁷ Any wilful disregard of an order requiring the bankrupt to pay to the trustee money which belongs to the estate may be punished.²¹⁸ A bankrupt may be committed for contempt because of his refusal to surrender his books of account to the receiver in bankruptcy.²¹⁹ So also may a stakeholder be adjudged guilty of contempt where he refuses to surrender to the marshal money placed in his hands by the bankrupt.²²⁰ False swearing, although punishable as perjury, is also punishable summarily as a contempt of court.²²¹ So, too, any intentional evasion and refusal to make proper explanation of material facts or a deliberate determination to conceal such facts may be punished.²²² A city marshal who proceeds in executing a writ of replevin, although notified that an injunction has been issued in bankruptcy proceedings, is guilty of a contempt.²²³ And the same is true of the disobedience by a creditor of an order staying an action in a State court by levying and selling exempt property before confirmation of the action of trustee in setting same aside.^{223a} But a creditor is not guilty of contempt merely by taking proceedings in a State court to enforce a dischargeable claim, even with knowledge that the bankrupt has obtained a discharge.^{223b}

d. Practice.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The practice outlined in the case of Muller v. Nugent,²²⁴ will be found useful in conducting proceedings in contempt. The mode of proceeding in a court of bankruptcy to determine whether the party complained of is guilty of contempt should conform as nearly as may be to the established practice in like cases in all other United State courts; whatever is legally sufficient to purge a contempt in any of bankruptcy, constitutes a commanding injunction of the court against the interference of the bankrupt or third persons with, and their concealment or removal from the trustee or the court of any of the property of the bankrupt, and that a wilful violation of such injunction will be punished as a contempt of court."

Expenditure of money to effect compromise.—Where a bankrupt is charged with criminal contempt based on his failure to turn over moneys in his possession at the filing of the petition he cannot successfully defend on the ground that he used the money in an effort to effect composition, for the court is a participant in such proceedings and the bankrupt cannot, after a petition has been filed, dissipate the estate in personal efforts, out of court and without its knowledge, to effect a compromise with creditors. Matter of Mardenfeld (D. Concealment of assets; failure to explain.—Where a bankrupt, who has knowingly disposed of or concealed property after notice of involuntary bankruptcy proceedings and who had immediately preceding bankruptcy quandered or recklessly disposed of partnership assets under circumstances indicating an intent to defraud creditors, is ordered to account for the property disposed of, a failure on his part to appear before a special master and frankly explain the various transactions is punishable as for a contempt. In re Smith (D. C., N. Y.), 26 Am. B. R. 890, 185 Fed. 968.

such courts is sufficient for like purpose in a court of bankruptcy.²²⁵ In the case of Mueller v. Nugent, on the verified petition of the trustee, the referee issued a show cause to the party alleged to be in possession of the property coupled with an injunction. On the return day, a response on behalf of the claimant was filed. The matter was then heard summarily by the referee who found the response insufficient. Thereupon, the referee granted an order directing a surrender to the trustee within a limited period. On default being made, the referee certified the facts to the judge, recommending that the respondent be punished and committed for contempt. In this case, a review of this order was asked. The same result would have been accomplished had the respondent appeared voluntarily before the judge and brought up the whole matter on the merits, the judge not being in such case bound by the findings of fact of the referee.²²⁶ The judge, with all the facts thus before him, affirmed the order of the referee, found the respondent guilty of contempt, and called him to the bar for commitment. This practice is not fixed by rules. It may be varied to fit the circumstances of each case. Valuable precedents will be found in the Supreme Court decisions controlling the procedure to punish for contempts in other than courts of bankruptcy.

(2) NOTICE OF HEARING.—The person alleged to be in contempt must be given notice of the charge against him, and be given an opportunity to show cause why he should not comply with the order.²²⁷ An order committing a person for failure to comply with the direction of the court, granted without notice and an opportunity to be heard, violates one of the fundamental principles of our laws and cannot be sustained.²²⁸

Turnover and contempt proceedings separate.—In a turnover proceeding the issue is whether the bankrupt had property within his possession or control at the date of bankruptcy which he had retained and concealed from his trustee. In a contempt proceeding the only question is whether the bankrupt is presently able to comply with the court's order previously made. Frederick v. Silverman (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 42 Am. B. ²³² Opportunity to be heard.—In the case of In re Rosser (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 4 Am. B. R. 153, 101 Fed. 562, the court said: "The basic principle of English jurisprudence is that no man shall be deprived of life, liberty or property, without due process of law, without a course of legal proceedings according to those rules and forms which have been established for the protection of private rights. Such a course must be appropriate to the case and just to the party affected. It must give him notice of the charge or claim against him and an opportunity to be heard respecting the justice of the order or judgment sought. And the opportunity to be heard must be such that he may, if he chooses, cross-examine the witnesses produced to sustain the claim and produce witnesses to refute it if a question of fact is in issue, and if a question of law is presented, the opportunity to be heard must be such that his counsel may, if they desire, argue the justice and propriety of the judgment or order proposed. Judicial orders or judgments affecting the lives or property of citizens in the absence of such a notice and opportunity to the party affected are violative of the fundamental principles of our laws and cannot be sustained."

Notice to bankrupt.—Where an order requiring the bankrupt to turn over property to his trustee is based upon a hearing had without notice to the bankrupt such order may not be enforced by punishment for contempt. In re Frank (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 496, 182 Fed. 704.

Right to be heard.—In the case of Matter of Banzai Mfg. Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 497, 183 Fed. 298, the court held that where a person has been duly ordered to pay over to the trustee money found to be due the estate and he fails to do so, he is nevertheless entitled to be heard on the question whether he should be committed to jail for such failure, and an ex parte order judging him in contempt, of the application for which he had no notice, stating when or where such application would be made, will be reversed.

(3) PLEADING; INTERVENTION. A proceeding to punish a bankrupt for contempt should be brought by petition, alleging essential facts. A petition would be insufficient which merely contained such allegations as would be required for ordinary supplementary proceedings, without alleging that the bankrupt's failure to pay money or restore property was wilful and that he had the ability to do so if he would.²²⁹ Although if it had already been made to appear after a full hearing that the bankrupt had concealed available assets, it would not be necessary to allege inability to restore.²³⁰ Where the proceeding for the examination of a bankrupt is brought, prior to the appointment of a receiver or trustee, by petitioning creditors, an order to permit outside creditors to intervene for the purpose of punishing the bankrupt for contempt should not be granted.²³¹

(4) CONDUCT OF PROCEEDINGS; ORDER OF COMMITMENT.—The court will not be deceived by evasions, or deterred by consequences.²³² It has been held that the respondent's answer may not be traversed but that it should be taken as true, and if in fact false, prosecution should be had against him for perjury.²³³ An order which directs a marshal to confine the bankrupt in jail until he complies with the order is erroneous; the order should permit the bankrupt to show that he has complied therewith.²³⁴ Upon a motion to punish a bankrupt for contempt because of his refusal to obey the order of the referee directing him to turn over certain property to his trustee, the only question at issue is the disposition of the property by the bankrupt since the date of the order; the bankrupt is estopped from denying that he was in possession of the property directed to be turned over.²³⁵ A referee in bankruptcy has no jurisdiction, upon a petition by the bankrupt and some of his creditors, to order the trustee to refrain from taking further proceedings for the commitment of the bankrupt for failure to comply with an order of the court for delivery to his trustee of certain property; this question should be determined by the court upon the return of the bankrupt to an order to show cause.²³⁶ Section 41-b prescribes the procedure to be followed in the punishment of a contempt before a referee. The required steps must be closely followed. A further discussion of the required practice will be found under that section.²³⁷

e. Contempts before referee.—Subdivision (16) seems merely to confer on the judge power to punish for contempts other than those committed in his presence or consisting of violations of his own orders. He has the usual power, irrespective of statute, to punish for contempt committed in his presence. If the contempt is committed in the presence of the referee, § 41

²³¹ Right of outside creditor to move to punish for contempt.—Where no receiver or trustee of a bankrupt has been appointed, but only a custodian, and an order for examination has been obtained by the petitioning creditors, a motion by an outside creditor, without previous application to the court for leave to intervene to punish the bankrupt for contempt, should be denied, in the absence of any allegation of neglect or misconduct applies. The district court may summarily try and determine the question as to whether an assault upon a trustee, as an officer of the court, had been committed, and if so whether it was a contempt of court.²³⁸

VIII. BRINGING IN ADDITIONAL PARTIES.

Subdivision 6 of this section authorizes the court in bankruptcy to bring in and substitute additional persons or parties when necessary for the complete determination of a matter in controversy. The case of Bryan v. Bernheimer is an instance where this power was recognized.²³⁹ This power is an important one in bringing about a complete determination of the rights of all parties interested in the property subject to the proceeding. The power has been exercised to bring in a non-joining partner,²⁴⁰ and persons who have filed mechanics' liens for labor and materials furnished to the bankrupt in the construction of a building.²⁴¹ It may be exercised where the name of a creditor has been inadvertently omitted from the schedule. The rule under the former law, that strangers to the proceedings cannot be compelled to come in, is probably still the law; for subsection (6) refers only to "proceedings in bankruptcy."²⁴² Under the case of Bardes v. Bank,²⁴³ consent of the proposed defendant was necessary, where the stranger to the proceeding claimed title adversely. Since the amendment of 1903, however, this distinction is not important. The court can order the trustee to sue in a district court, and thus in effect bring in strangers to proceedings in bankruptcy.²⁴⁴ The statute makes ample provision for the intervention of creditors who have failed for some sufficient reason to join with the original petitioners.²⁴⁵ The power to bring in additional parties as conferred by this subdivision, is sufficiently broad to permit the bringing in of any person who has any claim or interest which may be properly determined in the proceedings.

IX. COLLECTION AND DISTRIBUTION OF ESTATES AND DETERMINATION OF CONTROVERSIES.

a. In general.—By subdivision 7 of this section courts of bankruptcy have power to cause the assets of bankrupts to be collected, reduced to money and distributed, and to determine controversies in relation thereto except as herein otherwise provided. It will not be attempted to discuss in this place the power hereinafter conferred upon trustees to sue to recover property preferentially and fraudulently transferred or of a court of bankruptcy generally to entertain a suit for the collection of the bankrupt's assets. the building and to determine the validity of the liens, in order to make proper distribution of the funds arising under the contract of each lienor, and to determine what is due the bankrupt estate.

powers are more appropriately considered under other sections of the act.²⁴⁶ It will only here be attempted to show how the power may be exercised generally and without special regard for other provisions of the act.

b. Collection and distribution.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The act of 1867 contained similar language conferring upon courts of bankruptcy the power to collect and distribute the estates of bankrupts. Precedents under that law will be found valuable. The power to turn a bankrupt's estate into money and distribute it pro rata would probably flow from subd. 15, were it not specifically conferred by subd. 7. The power conferred by this subdivision is broad and should be liberally construed in connection with other provisions of the act to accomplish the purposes thereof. The power to collect and reduce to money has a bearing upon the jurisdiction of the court to entertain and determine suits brought by receivers or trustees for the purpose of collecting and reducing to money all the assets of the bankrupt. This subdivision confers express power upon the bankruptcy court to aid duly authorized officers of the court in collecting and distributing the bankrupt's assets. Unless otherwise provided in the act, the power conferred by this subdivision appears to be plenary.²⁴⁷

(2) RECOVERY OF PROPERTY.—The extent of this jurisdiction and the conditions under which it will be exercised fall within the consideration of section 23 of the act, which confers jurisdiction upon bankruptcy courts in respect to suits by the trustee, for the recovery of property.²⁴⁸ The power to recover property by suit is subject to the limitation "except as otherwise provided in this act," which evidently has reference to the limitation on the jurisdiction of the district courts imposed by such section.²⁴⁹ It is this power to collect the estate of the bankrupt that authorizes the court to issue all necessary orders directing the bankrupt and others having property belonging to the estate to surrender the same to the trustee.²⁵⁰ It has been deemed sufficient to justify an order directing the bankrupt to sign and deliver to a stock exchange a request for the sale of his seat, and for the payment of the proceeds to the trustee in bankruptcy.²⁵¹ So, too, where property of bankrupt has been taken under a void attachment an order may be issued directing the surrender of the proceeds of the attachment sale to the trustee.²⁵² The court may compel the surrender of money or other assets of the bankrupt, or that of some one for him, on petition and rule to show cause.²⁵³ Where a fraudulent

Trust agreement with creditors.—A court of bankruptcy has jurisdiction to order that dividends due and payable to creditors of the bankrupt who signed a trust agreement be applied to the satisfaction of the claim of the trustee before payments to creditors who had expressly stipulated that the claim of the trustee should be first paid out of the assets of the bankrupt. *Searle v. After discharge.—A court of bankruptcy may compel a bankrupt to turn over assets in his possession after his discharge, or after the expiration of the statute of limitations against criminal prosecution for concealment of assets. Matter of Levy (D. C., Pa.), 44 Am. B. R. 248, 261 Fed. 432, affd. 45 Am. B. R. —.

Summary order compelling bankrupt to turn over property.—An order directing a bankrupt to pay over money to his trustee relates to funds under his control at the date of bankruptcy and not at the date of the order, and should so state. Matter of Pennell (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 32 Am. B. R. 241, 214 Fed. 337.

transfer has been made, and the court is satisfied that there is danger of the property transferred being dissipated, the court may order a seizure of the property.²⁵⁴ The court may order property of the bankrupt in the hands of an agent to be delivered to the receiver pending the appointment of a trustee.²⁵⁵ If the court is convinced²⁵⁶ that a third person has money belonging to the bankrupt's estate, it is its duty to require the payment thereof to the trustee; if the money is traced into the hands of such third person the burden is on him to explain how it came there, what became of it, or that he did not have it when the order was made.²⁵⁷ But it is only in clear cases, in which the proof is decisive, that the court is justified in making a peremptory order against a third party directing the disclosure of concealed assets.²⁵⁸ If property mortgaged is not in the possession of a trustee, and the general creditors have no interest therein the court has no jurisdiction to set aside and cancel the mortgage.²⁵⁹ In the exercise of the jurisdiction here conferred the court will be governed by the provisions of section 60-b, which authorizes the trustee to recover property which has been transferred preferentially; of section 67-e, which requires a trustee to institute such suits and proceedings as may be required to reclaim or recover property which has been transferred or incumbered unlawfully; and generally of section 70-e which authorizes a trustee to avoid any transfer of the bankrupt's property which might have been avoided by any creditor of the bankrupt.

(8) SALE OF PROPERTY; ADMINISTRATION.—The power to cause the bankrupt's estate to be reduced to money implies the power to direct the sale of the estate, either subject to or clear from mortgages or other liens.²⁶⁰ It includes the power to preserve the estate, as well as the power to sell. Hence, it comprises the power to enjoin those who would interfere with the

In the case of In re Arden (D. C., N. Y.), 26 Am. B. R. 684, 188 Fed. 475, the court said: "This court may, under section 2 of the Bankrupt statute, sell an interest, such as a remainder in real property, and pay off a judgment or mortgage lien on said interest, if the proceeds be sufficient for that purpose, in order to preserve the equity in the property for the benefit of general creditors, but the lien and all rights accruing therefrom, must be respected by the bankruptcy court."

Property not scheduled.—A District Court has jurisdiction to sell a life-estate of the bankrupt, although it was not scheduled and surrendered. Gray v. Gudger (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 44 Am. B. R. 228, 260 Fed. 331.

due administration of assets.²⁶¹ This power extends even to a refusal to administer burdensome property.²⁶² Under the present law, it has been asserted to the extent of ordering an assessment for unpaid subscriptions upon the stockholders of a bankrupt corporation.²⁶³ So also in respect to the liquidation of a claim for damages of the bankrupt against a creditor who has come into court with a claim against the estate.²⁶⁴ But the power does not include the power to direct the persons interested in the estate to accept a plan whereby it is proposed to reorganize the business of the bankrupt as a corporation and to deliver to the creditors bonds or other evidences of indebtedness binding upon the proposed corporation.²⁶⁵

(4) CUSTODY OF PROPERTY BY RECEIVER OR MARSHAL.—This subdivision is frequently considered in connection with that provision of the same section which authorizes an order directing the receiver or marshal to take charge of the property of the bankrupt.²⁶⁶ The provisions apply to the powers of receivers or the marshal to take charge of property of bankrupts in the hands of third persons after the filing of the petition, and until it is dismissed or the trustee has qualified.²⁶⁷

c. Settlement of controversies.—Subdivision 7 empowers courts of bankruptcy to determine controversies in relation to the estates of bankrupts, "except as herein otherwise provided." The exception has reference particularly to the limitation imposed upon the jurisdiction of such courts by § 23-b.²⁶⁸ The jurisdiction in respect to the determination of controversies, prior to the amendatory act of 1903, depended on who were the parties to the Reorganization of corporations.—In the case of Matter of Cornell Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 26 Am. B. R. 252, 186 Fed. 856, the court said: "Nor can a bankruptcy court compel a creditor to consent to have all the bankrupt estate transferred to a corporation and accept in settlement of his claim obligations of the new corporation, payable at a future date. There is no explanation in this bid of what the amount of the capital of the new corporation will be, or how it will be furnished, or how the money necessary to carry on the business will be obtained, but the bid states that any new indebtedness which may be necessarily created by the corporation for money borrowed for any purpose shall have priority over all the certificates of indebtedness proposed to be given in settlement of the debts of the bankrupt. The proposition therefore is that a court of bankruptcy is to authorize a transfer of all the assets of the bankrupt to a corporation, and compel the creditors of the bankrupt to take the unsecured obligations of the new corporation, payable a long time in the future, and to leave it in the power of the new corporation to create obligations which shall be a prior lien on its assets over its liability upon its obligations to the creditors of the bankrupt. I am clear that a court of bankruptcy has no power to authorize such a sale, and, if it had, I should deem it inexpedient to do so."

In the case of In re Northampton Portland Cement Co., (D. C., Pa.), 25 Am. B. R. 565, 185 Fed. 542, the court held that it had no power to compel creditors of a bankrupt corporation to give up their existing claims, and in the place of such claims to accept stock in the new corporation to be formed to take over all the assets of the bankrupt, and to assent to other conditions contained in the plan of reorganization, even though the plan is a desirable one, and regular administration in bankruptcy would result in heavy loss to the creditors.

suit.²⁶⁹ Since then, as to suits to recover property, it depends, as did the same jurisdiction under the law of 1867, on the subject-matter.²⁷⁰ When the property has become subject to the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court as that of the bankrupt, whether held by him or for him, jurisdiction exists to determine the controversies in relation to the disposition of the same and the extent and character of liens thereon or rights therein.²⁷¹ If the property or fund is in the possession of the court, represented by one of its officers, as receiver or trustee, controversies in respect thereto are clearly within its jurisdiction.²⁷² If the property is in the possession of an adverse claimant the court cannot summarily direct him to turn the property over to an officer of the court.²⁷³ If an adverse claimant bases his right upon that of the bankrupt the controversy is within the summary jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court.²⁷⁴ The rule may be summarized as follows: Where there is a claim of adverse title to property of the bankrupt based on a transfer antedating the bankruptcy, a plenary suit must be brought, either at law or in equity, by the trustee, in which the adverse claim of title may be adjudicated. But if there is no such adverse claim of title, and the property is in the physical possession of a third party, or of an agent of the bankrupt, or of an officer of a bankrupt corporation, who refuses to deliver it to the trustee, it is not necessary to bring a plenary suit, but the court may act summarily.²⁷⁵ All of these rules are elaborated upon and discussed fully under section 23 which has special reference to suits by trustees in respect to property in the bankrupt estate.

X. CLOSING AND REOPENING ESTATES.

a. In general.—Subdivision 8 of section 2 invests courts of bankruptcy with the power to "close estates whenever it appears that they have been fully administered, by approving the final accounts and discharging the trustees, and reopen them whenever it appears they were closed before being fully administered." The final accounts of trustees are to be filed with the court fifteen days before the date fixed for the final meeting of the creditors.²⁷⁶

b. Closing estates.—Under this subdivision an estate can only be closed when it appears that it has been fully administered.²⁷⁷ Where the final account of the trustee has been approved, the trustee discharged and all the funds of the estate distributed, the estate will be deemed "closed" within the meaning of this subdivision.²⁷⁸ Where there are no assets and no creditors appear at the first meeting, the appointment of a trustee may be dispensed with.²⁷⁹ It would seem to follow that where there are no assets, an estate may not be technically closed under this subdivision.²⁸⁰ The estate is usually closed by the entry of an order approving the accounts of the trustee and discharging him from his trust. By the terms of the subdivision the act of closing the estate consists of the approval of the final accounts and the discharge of the trustee.²⁸¹ As we have seen the general policy of the law requires trustees and other court officials to deal expeditiously with the administration of bankrupt estates.²⁸² The closing of the estate does not operate to transfer the title of unadministered assets back to the bankrupt,

276. See Bankr. Act, § 47-a, subd. 8, and cases cited thereunder. As to closing and reopening estate in bankruptcy, see cases digested in Am. B. R. Dig. §§ 623-629. Matter of Sayer (D. C., N. Y.), 32 Am. B. R. 90, 210 Fed. 397. (Quoting text.)

Notice to creditors.—An order of a referee closing a bankrupt's estate is a nullity, and the estate remains open under the original order of reference, where the referee fails to give to creditors the ten days' notice required by section 58. Matter of Levy (D. C., Pa.), 44 Am. B. R. 248, 261 Fed. 432.

It is provided in section 11-d, that "suits shall not be brought by or against the trustee of a bankrupt estate subsequent to two years after the estate has been closed." There is no difficulty as to the time when an estate is deemed closed, where the trustee has assets in his possession and makes distribution thereof among the creditors. In such cases the time of closing is the date of the discharge of the trustee upon submission of his final account. More difficulty will arise in determining the time of closing when the estate of the bankrupt contains no assets. (See discussion of this subject under Section Eleven of this work, subtitle "Limitation on Suits by Trustees.") was no final meeting of creditors or discharge of the trustee upon the settlement of his accounts."

281. Settlement of estate.—The final settlement of the bankrupt's estate will not be ordered until a full and complete record of the proceedings is made, showing that they have been conducted in accordance with the requirements of the act and the general orders of the Supreme Court and the district rules and a balance sheet is presented which can be understood, and from which the bankrupt and his creditors can see what has been done with their money. In re Carr (D. C., N. C.), 8 Am. B. R. 635, 116 Fed. 556.

The record of a referee made in a book retained by him, reciting "order allowing account and discharging trustee filed," is not in itself conclusive that the estate was closed. Matter of De Ran (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 44 Am. B. R. 409, 260 Fed. 732.

Speedy administration.—In the case of Boyd v. Glucklich (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 8 Am. B. R. 393, 116 Fed. 131, the court said: "The bankruptcy act contemplates that proceedings in bankruptcy shall go forward with all reasonable dispatch compatible with the due and orderly administration of justice and a proper regard for the fundamental rights of the citizens." so as to permit recovery by the legal representatives of the bankrupt after his death.²⁸³

c. Reopening estates.—(1) IN GENERAL.—This subdivision recognizes the power of the court to reopen estates “whenever it appears they were closed before being administered.” Upon the proper showing of jurisdictional facts, it is the duty of the court to reopen the estate.²⁸⁴ The exercise of the power to reopen rests in the sound discretion of the court, upon the consideration of all the circumstances.²⁸⁵ The reopening does not reinstate the discharged trustee, but creates a vacancy in the office, to be filled as provided in § 44, post.²⁸⁶

(2) LACK OF ADMINISTRATION SOLE GROUND.—The subdivision provides for the reopening of an estate only when closed “before being administered.” This is the only ground for the reopening of an estate. It becomes essential therefore to ascertain whether there has been a lack of administration before granting the application to reopen.²⁸⁷ The common cause is, therefore, the discovery of unadministered assets, and it has been held that the allegations of the petition to reopen must be such as to satisfy the court that such assets exist.²⁸⁸ An application by the bankrupt to reopen the proceedings may be granted on the ground of newly discovered assets, although the time for filing claims has expired.²⁸⁹ And where the bankrupt failed to schedule an interest in a trust fund the estate should be reopened where it appears that the bankrupt has an interest in remainder or expectancy in such trust.²⁹⁰

(3) PARTIES WHO MAY APPLY.—The application for reopening must be made by some party interested in the estate, and who would be benefited by the reopening.²⁹¹ Creditors who have not proved their claims cannot apply for the relief.²⁹² A former trustee has no standing in court to seek the reopening of an estate.²⁹³

(4) NOTICE AND PETITION.—The practice is simple—an ex parte application to the judge for an order reopening, and, if granted, a reference to the referee and a meeting of creditors on notice, with the other subsequent proceedings as in the original case. The petition to reopen an estate need not be of any formal or technical character, but should reasonably satisfy the court of the requisite jurisdictional fact of non-administration.²⁹⁴ The petition is not required to show what property was surrendered by the bankrupt, or what representations were made in his schedules, nor that any creditor was deceived by his representations.²⁹⁵

(5) HEARING ON APPLICATION.—The jurisdictional facts must appear, that is, it must be established in some legal way that some assets belonging to bankrupt at the time of his bankruptcy were not administered in the proceeding.²⁹⁶ And to establish the essential facts the court may take into consideration anything that appears in the record of the original bankruptcy proceeding.²⁹⁷

(6) WHEN APPLICATION GRANTED.—The application may be granted where a probable fraudulent transfer of property is apparent; in such case the order reopening the estate should not be construed as authorizing the trustee to commence an action in a State court to set aside the transfer.²⁹⁸ The bankrupt's application to reopen made several months after his discharge, so as to permit him to amend his schedules by inserting the name of a creditor omitted therefrom, so that the bankrupt may be discharged also from such creditor's claim should be denied.²⁹⁹ But a reopening after a discharge has been permitted for the purpose of amending schedules by inserting a claim upon which an action was pending at the time of adjudication and to which a counterclaim had been pleaded.³⁰⁰ Where assets are discovered or become available which were not known or were unadministered when the estate was closed, an order may be made reopening the estate; such assets must have been in existence when the petition was filed, and must be such as would pass to the trustee.³⁰¹ And where an estate has been opened because of newly discovered assets the bankrupt will be permitted to amend his schedules to include exemptions, where he had received but a part of the exemptions to which he was entitled, because of insufficiency of assets.³⁰² Where a discharge was refused because the bankrupt had not accounted for a large sum of money, the estate may be reopened.³⁰³ It has been held that, where the time to file claims has expired, a reopened case will redound to the benefit only of creditors whose claims were allowed in the original proceeding.³⁰⁴ Laches of the applicant may deprive him of his right to a reopening.³⁰⁵ Where the proceedings have been dismissed by consent of the creditors they will not be reopened.^{306a} It frequently becomes necessary to reopen estates that there may be a trustee on whom process may be served; thus, where burdensome property has vested in the trustee, and, by inadvertence, he has not been formally excused from taking the same, and a mortgagee wishes to foreclose.

XI. CONFIRMATION OR REJECTION OF COMPOSITIONS.

Subdivision 9 of this section authorizes a court of bankruptcy to "confirm or reject compositions between debtors and their creditors, and set aside compositions and reinstate the cases." Section 12 of the act recognizes and specifies the compositions which are subject to confirmation by the court. This whole subject is discussed under that section. The power conferred upon the court to confirm or reject such composition is limited to those recognized in § 12.³⁰⁶

XII. ENFORCEMENT OF ACT BY NECESSARY ORDERS, PROCESS OR JUDGMENT.

a In general.—Subdivision 15 invests courts of bankruptcy with the powers "to make such orders, issue such process, and enter such judgments in addition to those specifically provided for as may be necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this act." This is the omnibus clause of the section. Generally speaking, it may be availed of to compel anything which ought to be done for, or to prevent anything which ought not to be done against, the enforcement of the law; provided the court of bankruptcy otherwise has jurisdiction of the person or the subject-matter.³⁰⁷ Under the power here conferred the bankrupt may be compelled to perform other duties than those enumerated in § 7; he may be restrained from leaving the juris-

Omission to schedule worthless assets.—An estate in bankruptcy will not be reopened merely because the bankrupt inadvertently failed to schedule certain property which at the time and during the pendency of the bankruptcy proceeding was worthless, even though thereafter it acquired considerable value. Matter of Graff (D. C., N. Y.), 40 Am. B. R. 205, 242 Fed. 577.

Sale of assets discovered after closing estate.—A bankruptcy court may entertain an application by the bankrupt, after the estate is closed, for leave to turn over certain unscheduled property which was discovered after the estate was closed, and sell the same, in order to make title to those assets as to which the property was vested in the bankrupt estate, and as to which any question as to title may exist from the fact that they have not passed through the hands of the bankruptcy court. Matter of Graff (D. Loss of original proof.—See Matter of Reynolds (D. C., N. Y.), 42 Am. B. R. 628.

³⁰⁵ Laches in making application.—In the case of In re Paine (D. C., Ky.), 11 Am. B. R. 351, 127 Fed. 248, the court held the proper rule to be that a fairly reasonable time, under all the circumstances of the case, should be allowed and that if the parties who had full knowledge delayed an unreasonable time to seek to reopen a case, their laches should authorize the court to refuse to do so. In the case of In re Reese (D. C., Ala.), 8 Am. B. R. 411, 115 Fed. 993, it was held laches on the part of a creditor, who had received notice of the filing of a petition, to fail to contest the bankrupt's claim to exemption. In the case of Vary v. Jackson (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 21 Am. B. R. 334, 164 Fed. 840, a delay of seven years was held laches, especially since the petitioner failed to show when the alleged fraud was discovered. diction of the court in the proper case, by writ of ne exeat.³⁰⁶ This subdivision is not sufficiently broad to authorize an order requiring a bankrupt, who has been released from arrest, to give bail.³⁰⁷ It is ample to authorize a referee to order a creditor to file a bill of particulars as to a certain item in his claim.³¹⁰

b. Injunctions other than against suits.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Early in the administration of the present law, the injunction was frequently used to prevent the dissipation of assets to which the bankrupt had title.³¹¹ Through this power a court may extend the powers of receivers appointed under § 2 (3); in the exercise of it the court may compel the surrender by a bankrupt of his property. It is frequently called upon to justify the making of orders and the issuing of process required for the due administration of the bankrupt's estate. Many instances of such orders and process might be here cited, but it seems more appropriate to refer to them in connection with other parts of the act. The power to enjoin is inherent in the court of bankruptcy as a court of equity. It includes the power to grant stays, conferred by § 11, of pending suits in other courts. That the broad phrasing of subdivision 15 amounts to an express ratification of this inherent power has not been doubted. The exercise of it, like the quasi-criminal remedy of contempt, is essential to the due enforcement of the act, as was the additional process of seizure when the act complained of amounted to an act of bankruptcy or other fraud on the act.³¹² The power when exercised, is subject to the same rules and limitations as in the case of a writ of injunction issued under other circumstances; for instance its use is available to prevent the infliction of threatened or imminent, and not mere possible injury.³¹³ Where, however, the property at which the process was aimed was claimed adversely by another and in that other's possession, the Supreme Court's decision in the Bardes case at once made it doubtful whether this jurisdiction could longer be exercised.³¹⁴ This doubt has now been removed by the amendments of 1903.³¹⁵ It may be suggested, however, that Bryan v. Bernheimer, supra, having affirmed the doctrines of the earlier decisions and to that extent limited the Bardes case, the power to take a bankrupt's property from the possession of one who holds it under a transfer which is in itself an act of bankruptcy, and the lesser power of enjoining his disposition of it, have always been available.³¹⁶ Indeed, the reasoning of Bryan v. Bernheimer indicates that where the possession, though adverse, is through an act which amounts to a fraud on the law, though possibly not an act of bankruptcy, the power to enjoin existed even before the amendment of § 23-b by the act of 1903.³¹⁷ In any event, as the law now stands, ample authority exists to prevent by injunction the disposition of property in the possession of adverse claimants, pending the determination of the controversy as to the title of such property,³¹⁸ provided there is no unreasonable delay on the part of the attacking creditors.³¹⁹

R. 444, 177 Fed. 598, the court said: "Under the circumstances, it would seem that the only safe way to protect the rights of the creditors is to continue the injunction until the rights of the parties have been determined by a proper tribunal. Formerly it was doubtful whether a court of bankruptcy could take jurisdiction to restrain the disposition of property in possession of a third person claiming title thereto; but the case of Bryan v. Bernheimer, 181 U. S. 188, 5 Am. B. R. 623, 21 Sup. Ct. 557, 45 L. Ed. 814, and the amendment of 1903 (Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 8, 32 Stat. 798 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1312]), to section 23-b of the bankruptcy act, removes any doubt that may theretofore have existed as to such power. If the proposed sale of the property, which is in the possession of the wife of the bankrupt therein, is not enjoined during the pendency of the plenary action, it is not difficult to perceive that the interests of the general creditors are liable to suffer." of preserving the statu quo of the property until it may be ascertained whether or not an adjudication should be decreed.³²¹

(3) INJUNCTION TO RESTRAIN SALES.—Under this clause a court of bankruptcy may restrain a sale of the property of a bankrupt corporation, at the instance of its treasurer, to pay debts secured by a trust deed covering all the property, where it appears that the interests of all the parties would be protected by selling the property under the direction of the bankruptcy court.³²² The court may enjoin the sale of real property under foreclosure in a state court, where necessary to protect the interests of creditors of a bankrupt who has a substantial interest in such property;³²³ but the court should not intervene where the interests of the bankrupt's creditors in the property would be protected amply in the state court.³²⁴ Where the judgment of foreclosure antedated the four months' period before adjudication, the injunction will be denied.³²⁵ A bankruptcy court may not restrain a sale by the pledgee of property held by him under a valid agreement of pledge by the bankrupt and pursuant to its terms.³²⁶ Such a pledge and the rights of the parties thereto are governed by the law of the State where made,³²⁷ and, being valid and not forbidden by any provision of the bankruptcy act, cannot be interfered with by the court. A sale by a receiver of a corporation, who has been in possession for a considerable time prior to bankruptcy, should not be restrained unless it clearly appears that the interests of creditors will be thereby jeopardized.³²⁸

(4) OTHER INSTANCES WHERE INJUNCTION WILL ISSUE.—The power will be exercised to protect the bankrupt from the enforcement of a penalty imposed by a State law or city ordinance, for a failure to pay a dischargeable debt;³²⁹ and to protect the bankrupt from arrest while attending court or engaged in the performance of a statutory duty.³³⁰ Injunction will lie to prevent removal of property to a foreign country which is alleged to have ³²³ Jurisdiction to enjoin sale under mortgage foreclosure.—A bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to stop the sale of a bankrupt's property under a mortgage foreclosure in a State court where absolutely necessary under the facts of the particular case in order to protect the rights of the creditors or the trustee, which would otherwise be lost or impaired. Whether or not a sale should be enjoined, however, is a question of discretion and policy in each case under its peculiar facts. Broach v. Mullis (D. C., Ga.), 35 Am. B. R. 841, 228 Fed. 551.

Where a bankrupt has any substantial equity in real estate sought to be sold in foreclosure and partition actions, such sale should be stayed until a trustee is appointed and qualified so that he may protect the interests of the general creditors in such property. Matter of Morse (D. been preferentially transferred.³³¹ Where a contract is in existence in which the bankrupt has a valuable interest, the court may, at the instance of the trustee, restrain the violation of such contract.³³² An injunction to prevent the breach of a contract is a negative specific enforcement of it, and the test of the jurisdiction of equity to grant such an injunction is the inadequacy of the legal remedy.³³³ A bankruptcy court is empowered to protect a taxpayer whose property is in its custody from a fraudulent and excessive assessment.^{333a} An injunction will be granted restraining an intervenor from bringing any action, suit or proceeding in any court in respect of any orders of the bankruptcy court.^{333b}

c. Practice.— This protective process is frequently resorted to in involuntary cases, sometimes being included in and sometimes following the order appointing a receiver. Where possible, the order granted should be in the nature of a temporary stay, coupled with a show cause returnable on a day certain. The use of the writ itself is, however, not unusual, and, there being no limitation on its operation, as there is on the writ issued under § 11, it remains in force until modified or dissolved. Any one aggrieved can, on proper notice, move to dissolve. The application both for and to dissolve the injunction may be made on petition or affidavits, entitled in the case, and, if after the adjudication, should be made to the referee.³³⁴ It has been thought that the referee can grant no more than a temporary stay, the Supreme Court having, by General Order XII, limited the granting of injunctions on suits to the judge. But this general order affects the injunction here discussed only by analogy. Since Mueller v. Nugent, supra, it would seem that the referee, being vested with all the functions of a court of bankruptcy save a few, not inclusive of the power to enjoin, may grant permanent injunction orders having all the force of like orders issuing from the judge, except to stay proceedings of a court or an officer of the United State or of a State.³³⁵

the unsuccessful party, or the successful party for cause, or in part against each of the parties, and against estates, in proceedings in bankruptcy." This subdivision and General Order XXXIV must be read together. They are merely declaratory of the general power of courts of equity, including courts of bankruptcy, over the allowance and apportionment of costs.^{338a} The costs for which payment is herein authorized are such as are allowed by this act arising from the bankrupt proceedings in the administration of the estate.³³⁷ The costs taxable under this subdivision are something different from the costs allowed as fees and mileage of witnesses, and the allowances to the attorneys, which are considered under other sections of the act.³³⁸ So too, allowances for fees of stenographers are expressly provided for under § 38-a (5) and will be considered under that section. Costs must be allowed in all involuntary cases where the adjudication is contested.³³⁹ Only costs allowed by law may be taxed. Where there is no specific provision,³⁴⁰ this subdivision seems to assimilate costs in bankruptcy to those under the equity practice in the United States courts.³⁴¹ Under the former law, it was held that costs might be allowed the prevailing party in a proceeding to set aside a discharge;³⁴² under the present law, the same has been held as to a proceeding for a discharge.³⁴³

337. Costs in administration of estate.—In the case of Matter of Kyte (D. C., Pa.), 26 Am. B. R. 507, 189 Fed. 531, the court said: "Administration of an estate has been defined to mean, a term applied to denote the management of an estate by a person appointed by authority of law to take charge thereof in place of the legal owner. In a bankruptcy court the legal owner of the estate is the bankrupt, who is required to turn over his entire estate to some one to be designated by the creditors and approved by the court, for the purpose of administering the same for the benefit of all the bankrupt's creditors. All acts necessary to be done to accomplish the purpose of converting the assets of the estate and distributing the same to and amongst the creditors legally entitled thereto, as well as any act tending to increase the value of the estate, or in some material manner benefit the estate of the bankrupt, whereby the general interests of all the creditors may be advanced, constitute the administration of the estate. The intent of the law is to administer the estate for the general interests of all the creditors with the least possible expense, and to this end when any proposition of interest, as well as detrimental to the creditors is made, the law provides that all the creditors shall have notice of a time and place to meet and either assent to or disapprove of such proposition. This undoubtedly is a provision of the law which has been created to throw a safeguard around the interests of the creditors so that the opportunity for abuse or mismanagement of their interests may be reduced to a minimum."

Where the bankrupt consents costs may be paid from the proceeds of the sale of exempt property, even if a creditor having an equitable lien thereon objects to such payment.³⁴⁴ Precedents as to costs on appeal will be found in the foot-note.³⁴⁵ A bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to order costs against creditor who has unsuccessfully opposed an involuntary petition.^{345a} It seems, too, that under the previous law, costs were allowed against creditors who unsuccessfully contested the validity of claims,³⁴⁶ and that, if the trustee refused to object to claims, creditors successfully contesting the same were allowed costs out of the estate.³⁴⁷ Where an involuntary petition is dismissed for want of jurisdiction costs cannot be allowed to the successful party.³⁴⁸ But costs, to be taxable under this subdivision, must be incurred "in proceedings in bankruptcy." Costs may be taxed by the referee.³⁴⁹

Attorney's docket fee on hearing before referee.—A referee in bankruptcy is not a "referee" within the meaning of section 824 of the U. S. Revised Statutes, allowing a docket fee of twenty dollars "on a trial . . . before referees, or on a final hearing in equity." . . . Nor is a hearing upon a claim against the bankrupt estate "a final hearing" within the meaning of the statute. Hence, a docket fee should not be allowed under the statute on the hearing of a claim before the referee. Peck v. Richter (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 33 Am. B. R. 11, 217 Fed. 880.

SECTION THREE.

ACTS OF BANKRUPTCY.

§ 3. Acts of Bankruptcy.— Acts of bankruptcy by a person shall consist of his having (1) conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed, any part of his property with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors, or any of them; or (2) transferred, while insolvent, any portion of his property to one or more of his creditors with intent to prefer such creditors over his other creditors; or (3) suffered or permitted, while insolvent, any creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings, and not having at least five days before a sale or final disposition of any property affected by such preference vacated or discharged such preference; or (4) made a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors, *or, being insolvent, applied for a receiver or trustee for his property or because of insolvency a receiver or trustee has been put in charge of his property under the laws of a State, of a Territory, or of the United States; or (5) admitted in writing his inability to pay his debts and his willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt on that ground.

b A petition may be filed against a person who is insolvent and who has committed an act of bankruptcy within four months after the commission of such act. Such time shall not expire until four months after (1) the date of the recording or registering of the transfer or assignment when the act consists in having made a transfer of any of his property with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors or for the purpose of giving a preference as hereinbefore provided, or a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors, if by law such recording or registering is required or permitted, or, if it is not, from the date when the beneficiary takes notorious, exclusive, or continuous possession of the property unless the petitioning creditors have received actual notice of such transfer or assignment.

c It shall be a complete defense to any proceedings in bankruptcy instituted under the first subdivision of this section to allege and prove that the party proceeded against was not insolvent as defined in this act at the time of the filing the petition against him, and if solvency at such date is proved by the alleged bankrupt the proceedings shall be dismissed, and under said subdivision one the burden of proving solvency shall be on the alleged bankrupt.

d Whenever a person against whom a petition has been filed as hereinbefore provided under the second and third subdivisions of this section takes issue with and denies the allegation of his insolvency, it shall be his duty to appear in court on the hearing, with his books, papers and accounts, and submit to an examination, and give testimony as to all matters tending to establish solvency or insolvency, and in case of his failure to so attend and submit to examination the burden of proving his solvency shall rest upon him.

e Whenever a petition is filed by any person for the purpose of having another adjudged a bankrupt, and an application is made to take charge of and hold the property of the alleged bankrupt, or any part of the same, prior to the adjudication and pending a hearing on the petition, the petitioner or applicant shall file in the same court a bond with at least two good and sufficient sureties who shall reside within the jurisdiction of said court, to be approved by the court or a judge thereof, in such sum as the court shall direct, conditioned for the payment, in case such petition is dismissed, to the respondent, his or her personal representatives, all costs, expenses, and damages occasioned by such seizure, taking, and detention of the property of the alleged bankrupt.

If such petition be dismissed by the court or withdrawn by the petitioner, the respondent or respondents shall be allowed all costs, counsel fees, expenses, and damages occasioned by such seizure, taking, or detention of such property. Counsel fees, costs, expenses, and damages shall be fixed and allowed by the court, and paid by the obligors in such bond.

I. ACTS OF BANKRUPTCY IN GENERAL.

a. History and analogies.—In most of the continental bankruptcy systems, acts of bankruptcy, in our sense of the term, are unknown. Mere cessation of payment is enough to entitle the creditors to resort to the court. In France, the debtor is legally bound to notify the court that he has stopped payment. Indeed, in several of the Latin systems, the court may declare a debtor a bankrupt on its own motion. Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence, while allowing the debtor to initiate bankruptcy by his own declaration or petition, not only does not otherwise permit the court to adjudicate save at the instance of creditors, but even affords further protection against arbitrary or unjust interference with the property of the individual, by providing that he shall not be amenable to bankruptcy unless he has done or suffered certain acts which either amount to actual or constructive frauds on creditors or are tantamount to declarations of hopeless insolvency. These acts are called under our present statute "acts of bankruptcy."

b. Comparative legislation.—The present English act,¹ as supplemented by § 1 of the amendatory act of 1890, specifies eight acts of bankruptcy, four of which² are practical equivalents of the first, second, fourth, and fifth acts found in § 3-a of our law. Of the others, absconding or concealing himself³ is ancient, while of the remaining three an unpaid levy outstanding for twenty-one days⁴ is but little more drastic than is our third act of bankruptcy, and the giving of a notice by the debtor that he has suspended payments,⁵ or the failure on his part to respond within seven days to a demand to pay a final judgment,⁶ are but statutory recognition of the continental doctrine that cessation of payments and the status of bankruptcy are one and the same thing. The two systems, therefore, aside from the difference which grows out of our definition of insolvency, are, as acts of bankruptcy, near akin. There has been a like paralleling at other periods.⁷ The new Canadian act contains eight acts of bankruptcy, six of them corresponding to the five of our law with two additional ones, viz.: absconding with intent to defeat or delay creditors, and violation of the Bulk Sales Act.^{7a}

7a. Canadian Bankruptcy Act of 1919, § 8.

c. Former United States statutes.—The acts of bankruptcy in our statute of 1800⁸ were largely copied from those then in force in England. Of the six acts of bankruptcy in the law of 1841,⁹ only three, the procuring or suffering of a levy or attachment, the concealing of property with intent to prevent a levy, and the fraudulently conveying or transferring of property, are similar to those now available; only the last is in effect an equivalent. There were nine acts of bankruptcy under the law of 1867. The third and fourth are comprised within the present § 3-a (1), and the eighth is similar to our § 3-a (2). Here the similitude ends, save that the making of a general assignment became by judicial construction in effect a tenth act of bankruptcy. Our third act is new, as is our fifth. We certainly have now nothing like such once well-known acts of bankruptcy as the alleged bankrupt's abscondence, or being in custody on a civil judgment, or, if a banker, merchant, trader, or manufacturer, stoppage of payment for a specified period. The decisions under the former law, while, of course, valuable, are not always controlling.¹⁰ Where the language of the former act has been incorporated in the present act, it may be assumed that the intent was to use such language with the meaning given to it by the courts under such act.¹¹ The practitioner, when citing, should observe the changes in § 39 of the former statute made by the acts of June 22, 1874, and July 26, 1876. It is often important, too, to note the difference in phrasing between the two statutes, even where there is a seeming equivalence.¹²

d. Construction of the section.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 3 clearly indicates what wrongdoing or acts on the part of the bankrupt must be alleged in the creditors' petition and established by them as a part of their proof on the trial. Such a petition, prepared after carefully observing the provisions of this section, and of § 4-b, indicating against whom such a petition may be filed, and § 59-b, declaring by whom it may be filed, and § 2 (1), specifying where it may be filed, and § 18-a, indicating how it is served, and § 63-a-b, specifying what are petitioning creditor's debts, will, provided the act of bankruptcy relied on is alleged with sufficient detail, render the petitioners reasonably secure against a plea in the nature of a demurrer.¹³

(2) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—The purpose of the act as a whole is remedial; but this portion of it, while not penal, is in derogation of common-law rights. The higher courts have, therefore, quite uniformly refused to read into this and the corresponding sections of previous laws, meanings which do not appear from the very words.¹⁴ Strong reasons may, however, be urged for a liberal construction. The law was intended to compel prorating, by halting frauds and checking preferences. As has been seen, defined acts of bankruptcy are merely limitations expressive of the caution inherent in Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence when dealing with the rights to property. Being limitations on the operation of a statute that is highly remedial, a broad construction, while not perhaps so safe, would in the long run accomplish more equity.¹⁵ As a rule, the statute as an entirety, as well as its sections other than § 3, are liberally construed.¹⁶

(3) NOT APPLICABLE TO VOLUNTARY BANKRUPTCY.—The section does not apply to voluntary bankruptcy. A petition by a voluntary bankrupt is not required to set up any of the specific acts of bankruptcy contained in this section. A voluntary petition is itself treated as an act of bankruptcy.¹⁷

e. Insolvency when essential.—(1) IN GENERAL.—What constitutes insolvency has already been considered.¹⁸ Insolvency has in all bankruptcy laws been a most important element of allegation and proof. Yet, where the act of bankruptcy consists of a general assignment for the benefit of creditors,¹⁹ insolvency is immaterial.²⁰ Although where the act of bankruptcy consists of the appointment or the application for the appointment of a receiver, insolvency is a material element.²¹ The bankruptcy act does not prevent an insolvent person from disposing of his property, providing his dealings are conducted without any purpose of hindering or defrauding his creditors, or of giving a preference.²² The act is not intended to cover all cases of insolvency to the exclusion of judicial proceedings in State courts, affecting the property of the insolvent.²³

(2) PLEADING INSOLVENCY; SOLVENCY AS A DEFENSE.—Under the present definition, it is conceivable that a debtor who “admits in writing his inability Transactions by insolvent.—There is nothing in the bankrupt act, either in its language or object, which prevents an insolvent from dealing with his property, selling or exchanging it for other property at any time before proceedings in bankruptcy are taken by or against him, provided such dealing be conducted without any purpose to defraud or delay his creditors or give preference to any one, and does not impair the value of his estate. An insolvent is not bound, in the misfortune of his insolvency, to abandon all dealing with his property; his creditors can only complain if he waste his estate or give preference in its disposition to one over another. His dealing will stand if it leave his estate in as good plight and condition as previously. Cook v. Tullis, 18 Wall. 332, 340, 21 L. Ed. 933.

23. In re Wilmington Hosiery Co. (D. C., Del.), 9 Am. B. R. 581, 120 Fed. 179.

In the case of Wilson v. City Bank, 17 Wall. 473, 21 L. Ed. 723, the court said: “We do not construe the act as intending to cover all cases of insolvency to the exclusion of other judicial proceedings. It is very liberal in the classes of insolvents which to pay his debts"²⁴ may still be solvent; yet insolvency need not be alleged or shown. But it is either a necessary element of, or its opposite, a conclusive defense to, the other acts of bankruptcy.²⁵ A general averment in an answer, that no act of bankruptcy, such as is charged, has been committed, may be deemed sufficient as a denial of insolvency, although if insolvency be alleged as a material element, it would be better to specifically deny the insolvency at the time the act was committed.²⁶

(3) TIME OF INSOLVENCY.—It is important to determine the time of insolvency. The language of the statute in respect to the second and third acts of bankruptcy, indicates that the insolvency must be shown to exist at the time either of these acts was committed.²⁷ It is not sufficient as an answer to a petition alleging either the second, third, fourth, or fifth acts of bankruptcy, to allege solvency at the time the petition was filed.²⁸ But the act itself provides that it is a complete defense to a petition alleging the first act of bankruptcy to show that the alleged bankrupt was not insolvent at the time of the filing of the petition.²⁹

(4) PROOF OF INSOLVENCY.—The facts and circumstances indicating a state of insolvency have already been considered under section 1 (15), subtitle "INSOLVENCY." It will also be necessary to discuss the question under other headings under this section where the various acts of bankruptcy are treated, and also under sections 60 and 67 relative to preferential and fraudulent transfer hindering or defrauding creditors. There is a general presumption in favor of the continuance of the solvency of a debtor where shown to exist immediately prior to the alleged wrongful act, which requires presentation of proof to rebut.³⁰ It should be noted, however, that under subsection c of this section, the burden of proving solvency, where the alleged act of bankruptcy consists of a transfer with intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors, is on the bankrupt.³¹ That the act of bankruptcy itself brought about the insolvency is not enough.³² A general letter to creditors admitting insolvency will outweigh mere estimates.³³ Where upon the trial of the issue of insolvency the evidence is of such a conclusive character as to justify the court in setting aside a verdict in favor of solvency if one was awarded, the court it does include, and needs no extension in this direction by implication. But it still leaves in the great majority of cases, persons who are really insolvent, to the chances that their energy, care and prudence in business may enable them finally to recover without disastrous failure or positive bankruptcy. All experience shows both the wisdom and justice of this policy."

may direct a verdict of insolvency, although there is conflicting evidence as to details not essential to a conclusion.³⁴

(5) INSOLVENCY OF PARTNERSHIP.—If the insolvency of a partnership is at issue, it must not only be shown that the partnership assets are insufficient, but also that the assets of individual members, after paying their debts, are not enough to make up the deficiency.³⁵ It seems generally accepted, by the weight of authority, that the individual properties of the partners are to be considered in determining the question of the solvency of the firm.³⁶ It is impossible to declare a partnership insolvent so long as the partners are able to pay its debts and others, whether out of joint or separate estate, and hence the rule that a partnership is not insolvent unless all its partners are insolvent.³⁷ This entire question of solvency of a partnership is also considered under § 5 of the act.³⁸

II. ACTS OF BANKRUPTCY UNDER PRESENT LAW.

a. First act of bankruptcy; a fraudulent transfer.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The first act of bankruptcy prescribed by this section consists of a person having "conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed, any part of his property with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors or any of them." The important elements of this act of bankruptcy are: (1) The disposition of the bankrupt's property either by himself or by his permission, and (2) the intent to defraud creditors. The distinction is not clearly drawn between the first and second acts of bankruptcy. It will frequently be difficult to determine which of these two acts of bankruptcy has been committed by a transfer. This is due possibly to the fact Insolvency of partnership.—In the case of In re Bertenshaw (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 19 Am. B. R. 577, 588, 157 Fed. 363, it was said that "If a partnership is a distinct entity separate from the individuals who compose it,—if its property and its debts are separate and distinct from the property of its individual members, and from their individual debts, then it is insolvent under this act when the aggregate of its property is not sufficient to pay its debts." See also Matter of Everybody's Market (D. C., Okl.), 21 Am. B. R. 925, 173 Fed. 492; In re Perlhefter (D. C., N. Y.), 25 Am. B. R. 576, 177 Fed. 299; Tumlin v. Bryan (C. C. 36. Individual properties of partners.—In the case of In re Perley & Hays (D. C., Mo.), 15 Am. B. R. 54, 138 Fed. 927, the court said: "The real question in this case still remains. It is whether or not, the bankrupts were insolvent, within the meaning of the present Bankruptcy Act, or, to state it in another way, whether or not, the individual properties of the partners are to be considered in determining the question of insolvency. It has been held in a number of cases, that the individual properties must be considered, and I find no case to the contrary. Vaccaro v. Security Bank of Memphis, 4 Am. B. R. 474, 103 Fed. 436, 43 C. C. A. 279. This case, while not binding on this court, was decided by the Court of Appeals of the 6th Circuit. The same doctrine is distinctly held in the case of Davis v. Stevens, by Judge Corland, in 4 Am. B. R. 763, 104 Fed. 235. In both these cases the question was carefully considered, and these cases have the approval of this court." And see Matter of Hensley & Adams (D. C., Cal.), 36 Am. B. R. 1, 228 Fed. 564.

37. In re Forbes (D. C., Mass.), 11 Am. B. R. 787, 128 Fed. 137. In the case of In re Morgan & Williams (D. C., Ga.), 25 Am. B. R. 861, 184 Fed. 938, the court said: "Assuming the entity doctrine to prevail under the more recent decisions of the courts as contended by counsel for the petitioning creditor, and that the firm's assets and liabilities, would be a test of solvency or insolvency as against the firm, and that notwithstanding the fact that the individuals composing the firm are proceeded against also, still it must appear to justify the adjudication in bankruptcy, that the real indebtedness on the part of an alleged bankrupt firm to a petitioning creditor or creditors, exceeds the aggregate at a fair valuation of the alleged bankrupt firm's property."

that a transfer made with intent to prefer a creditor may have associated with it the intent to hinder, delay or defraud other creditors.³⁹ An intent to prefer is not to be confounded with an intent to defraud, nor a preferential transfer with a fraudulent one.⁴⁰ A preferential payment to creditors will, in most cases, amount to a transfer with intent to hinder, delay or defraud; but where such an act has been committed it falls under the second subdivision of subsection a. To constitute the first act of bankruptcy the disposition of the property and the intent must co-exist.⁴¹ It has been held that a transfer falling within the first clause of this section includes those which, according to the established course of authority, were fraudulent transfers at the time of the passage of the bankruptcy act; a mere preferential transfer as distinguished from a fraudulent transfer, is not an act of bankruptcy within the first clause of the section.⁴²

(2) BY WHOM MADE.—Any person who transfers any part of his property with intent “to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors” is guilty of this act of bankruptcy. The word “person” includes a corporation and a partnership.⁴³ An ultra vires act of a corporation, transferring, concealing or removing its property, with intent to hinder, delay and defraud its creditors is an act for which it may be adjudged a bankrupt.⁴⁴ Concealment of property with the intent to hinder, delay and defraud creditors, by a minority of the members of a firm without objection, constitutes an act of bankruptcy of the firm.⁴⁵

(3) DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY.—(I) Statute of frauds.—The particular acts referred to in subd. 1 of this section are those conveyances or transfers made with intent to hinder, delay or defraud, which were interdicted by the statute of frauds, now a part of the law of nearly every State.⁴⁶ The expression “transfer with intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors” is familiar to the law of fraudulent conveyances and was used in the common law as declared in the old statute of Elizabeth.⁴⁷ There can be no doubt that the intent was to use the words with the same meaning, construction and effect as have for a long period of time been attributed to them.⁴⁷ The words as so

A. 253, in which the court said: “The language of subsection 1 of § 3 is the familiar language of statutes against conveyances fraudulent as against creditors, and we think there can be no doubt that Congress intended the words employed should have the same construction and effect as have for a long period of time been used have always been held to require in order to invalidate a conveyance that there shall be actual fraud; and it makes no difference that the conveyance was made upon a valuable consideration if it appears to have been for the purpose of hindering, delaying or defrauding creditors.⁴⁸

(II) Particular transactions; chattel mortgages.—Just what transactions will furnish a legal presumption that this act of bankruptcy has been committed will depend largely on the State decisions. The execution of a chattel mortgage by a debtor to secure a present loan to pay certain creditors may be an act of bankruptcy under this subdivision.⁴⁹ A chattel mortgage which authorizes the mortgagor to remain in possession of the mortgaged property and to sell the same in the usual course of business, without any obligation to apply the proceeds to the payment of the debt is, under the laws of some States, constructively fraudulent as against creditors. Such fraud may be an element in an act of bankruptcy under this clause, unless it be purged by the mortgagee taking possession of the mortgaged property, before the creditors seize it, or take any action in respect to it.⁵⁰

(III) Conveyances as security.—If conveyances are made in good faith with the intent only of securing the grantees as sureties for the grantor, their execution is not an act of bankruptcy.⁵¹ A conveyance as security for a debt which was subsequently paid, but which the creditor was permitted to retain as a continuing security for subsequent indebtedness with the understanding that he was to record it at any time, will be deemed an act to hinder, delay or defraud creditors, and an act of bankruptcy if recorded within four months prior to filing the petition in bankruptcy.⁵² A mortgage on all the debtor's property is not within the act if the equity remaining is sufficient to pay his debts.⁵³

R. 510, 149 Fed. 992, where it was held that the giving of a mortgage to secure the purchase price of goods purchased, covering after-acquired stock, was not an act of bankruptcy.

50. Chattel mortgage constructively fraudulent; law of Missouri.—Although under the law of Missouri a conveyance to the use of the mortgagor, good between the parties, is constructively fraudulent as to creditors, in the absence of actual fraud, the constructive fraud implied from such a conveyance is purged away even as to creditors, by the mortgagee taking possession of the mortgaged property before creditors seize it or take any action to enforce their rights to it; and constructive fraud cannot be imputed to an alleged bankrupt so as to charge him with having committed an act of bankruptcy in transferring his property with intent to hinder, delay and defraud creditors, where in good faith and while solvent, he gave a chattel mortgage on his stock and fixtures, which although duly recorded three days afterwards, was constructively fraudulent as to creditors because it permitted the mortgagor to retain possession of the stock and sell the same in the usual course of business, but it appears that mortgagee took possession of the property by legal proceedings before the petition in bankruptcy was filed. Johansen Bros. Shoe Co. v. Alles (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 28 Am. B. R. 299, 197 Fed. 274.

(IV) Cash sales and payments.—Cash sales of property by the debtor, to meet an indebtedness, but the proceeds of which were not so applied, are not inhibited;⁵⁴ nor are such sales when made in the ordinary course of trade for full consideration, and not for the purpose of putting the property out of reach of creditors.⁵⁵ The payment of current expenses necessarily liquidated to continue the business would not be an act of bankruptcy.⁵⁶ The use of the alleged bankrupt's funds in the support of his family would not constitute an unlawful transfer; but a payment to an adult son who lives apart from the alleged bankrupt, or the transfer of property to his wife beyond her reasonable requirements may constitute an act of bankruptcy.⁵⁷

(V) Voluntary transfers.—Conveyances of real estate by a husband to his wife, without a present consideration, about a month prior to the filing of a petition against him is an act of bankruptcy.⁵⁸ And where such a conveyance is made, it will be deemed to have been made with the intent to hinder or delay creditors, although no fraudulent intention was shown or suspected.⁵⁹ But a mere voluntary transfer, impeachable only upon the ground that it is a preference, is not sufficient.⁶⁰

(VI) Change of title.—There can be no transfer in fraud of creditors unless the title to the property is changed. So an instrument executed by the officers of an alleged bankrupt, containing no words of conveyance or transfer, but merely designating persons as agents or attorneys for the stockholders, to wind up the affairs of the corporation, is not a fraudulent transfer and its execution does not constitute an act of bankruptcy.⁶¹ And a deed of trust executed by an alleged bankrupt and delivered in escrow, is not a transfer in fraud of creditors, where it appears that the creditors would within the period prior to final delivery of the deed be paid in full.⁶²

(4) MEANING OF WORDS OF DEVOLUTION.—The word "convey" has its common meaning and is the equivalent of "grant." The word "transfer" has a broad generic meaning; it is defined for the purposes of this act in § 1 (15). The payment of a partner's individual debts out of the assets of the Deed of trust with condition.—It has been held an act of bankruptcy where an insolvent debtor conveyed all his property to a trustee with directions as to the payment of creditors without preference, and the deed contained a condition of defeasance and an equity reserved in the property to the grantor after the satisfaction of the claims of the beneficiaries, in that such transfer was made to hinder, delay and defraud his creditors. partnership is, as to the creditors of the partnership, a transfer.⁶³ A discussion of what constitutes a concealment of property is had under § 29-b, post; to determine the meaning of this term reference should be made to § 1 (22). A debtor who absconds and takes part of his property with him, both "conceals" and "removes" the property.⁶⁴ When the quantum of the property is not kept under cover, but remains visible, even though the transaction is fraudulent, it is not such a concealment as to amount to an act of bankruptcy.⁶⁵ The word "removed" as used in this clause signifies an actual or physical change in the position or locality of the property constituting the subject of the removal.⁶⁶ Where property is removed by a creditor in the debtor's absence, and against his protest, the failure to take legal proceedings to recover such property is not an act of bankruptcy.⁶⁷ A person does not "permit" a removal or concealment of property who has neither the power nor right to prevent it.⁶⁸

(5) INTENT TO HINDER, DELAY OR DEFRAUD.—(I) In general.—The intent on the part of the debtor to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors must be shown in order to constitute the transfer an act of bankruptcy under this subdivision.⁶⁹ It is still an open question whether a voluntary receivership by an insolvent corporation under a State law may not be "with intent to hinder or delay creditors" and thus an act of bankruptcy, irrespective of the amendment of 1903.⁷⁰ In a proceeding instituted prior to the amendment

Concealment by partner.—A withdrawal by a partner of firm money from a bank, and a refusal to produce it, tell where it is kept, or to pay it to the creditors of the firm constitutes a concealment of the partnership funds, with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors. Matter of Wellesley (D. The word "conceal," as used in section 3a (1), means to hide or withdraw from observation; to cover or keep from sight; to prevent the discovery of, or to withhold knowledge of; it has to do with what concerns others, and implies an act done or procured to be done which is intended to prevent or hinder. In re Glazier (D. Receivership of corporation.—In the case of In re Wilmington Hosiery Co. (D. C., Del.), 9 Am. B. R. 581, 120 Fed. 171, it was held that where an insolvent corporation, against which a bill was filed alleging its insolvency and praying the appointment of a receiver, and a receiver was thereupon appointed who took possession of its property, the corporation did not thereby permit its property to be removed, with intent to hinder or delay its creditors, within the meaning of § 3-a (1). of 1903 it was held that the appointment of a receiver of an insolvent partnership was not an act of bankruptcy under this clause.⁷¹ Thus, also, a transfer intended to delay was under the former statute held an act of bankruptcy.⁷² If the alleged bankrupt was insane at the time the transfer was made, he cannot be said to have made it with intent "to hinder, delay and defraud his creditors."⁷³

(II) Allegations in petition.—The petition should allege that the transfer or conveyance was made with intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors.⁷⁴ The facts relied upon to establish the alleged fraudulent transfer must be set forth with such fullness as to apprise the alleged bankrupt of what he will be required to meet;⁷⁵ there must be a full disclosure concerning the alleged fraudulent transfers, and it is not sufficient to set forth merely rumor, suspicion or hearsay.⁷⁶ Allegations that the defendant transferred his property with intent to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors should be specific if possible, but the purpose of the law does not require greater detail than it is probable that creditors can furnish.⁷⁷ An allegation, in the language of the statute, of a disposition of property to hinder, delay and defraud creditors, is not sufficient; facts and circumstances should be stated from which the inference may be drawn that the disposition of the property was done with an evil intent.⁷⁸ A petition is insufficient which fails to describe the prop-

On the trial of such an issue, the adjudication of lunacy may, perhaps, be offered as prima facie evidence of insanity, provided it shows lunacy at the time of the commission of the alleged act of bankruptcy."

General averments in an involuntary petition that the alleged bankrupts within the four months' period, while insolvent, committed an act of bankruptcy by transferring a certain portion of their property to one or more of their creditors with intent to prefer, and that they have transferred and concealed large sums of money and valuable securities with intent to hinder, delay and defraud creditors, which concealment was and is continuous, are insufficient to sustain the petition upon demurrer. In re Rosenblatt & Co., (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 28 Am. B. R. 401, 193 Fed. 638; Matter of McGraw (D. C., W. Va.), 43 Am. B. R. 38, 254 Fed. 442.

A petition charging that the act of bankruptcy was the giving of a chattel mortgage within the four months' period must allege facts sufficient to show that it was given either with intent to hinder, delay and defraud creditors, or with intent to prefer mortgagee over other creditors. In re Flint Hill Stone & Construction Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 18 Am. B. R. 81, 149 Fed. 1,007.

An allegation, unsupported by other facts, that certain claims due the alleged bankrupt were assigned by it without consideration to one who has commenced suit on such claims, and that such assignment was made for the purpose of concealment, and to hinder, delay and defraud creditors, is insufficient to justify a conclusion that the assignment was not made for the purposes of collection. In re Radke Co. (D. erty alleged to have been transferred, the time of the alleged transfer, and to whom it was made.⁷⁹ A failure to allege that the transfer was made within the period of four months prior to the filing of the petition, renders the petition defective.⁸⁰ Where the act of bankruptcy consists of a concealment of the alleged bankrupt's property, the precise details of the act of concealment may not, from the nature of the act, be alleged; the manner and details of the concealment are matters of evidence and not of averment.⁸¹

(III) Proof of intent.—The intent of the transfer can rarely be established by direct proof.⁸² It may be inferred from the acts done and the surrounding circumstances, though the debtor denies such intent.⁸³ But the intent must be actual;⁸⁴ the mere fact that the transaction complained of has hindered or delayed creditors will not be enough.⁸⁵ The circumstances relied upon to show intent must be sufficient to lead to the conclusion that the debtor actually intended to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors. The words "hinder, delay or defraud" are used in the disjunctive; if a transfer is shown to have been made with intent to hinder and delay, it is not necessary to establish intent to defraud.⁸⁶ The intent may be established by the debtor's admission and declarations,⁸⁷ or it may be inferred from the act itself as a necessary consequence of it; for instance if a creditor in failing circumstances places all his property beyond the reach of his creditors, that fact may

Great latitude allowed.—In the investigation of questions of fraud, as a rule, great latitude is allowed in the admission of evidence, in order that the jury may be able to determine from all the circumstances whether the transaction was fraudulent or not. 86. Hinder and delay, intent to defraud.—

In the case of In re Hughes (D. C., N. Y.), 25 Am. B. R. 556, 183 Fed. 872, the court said: "The question, therefore, is whether this was a conveyance 'with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud' creditors, or any of them. The statute is in the disjunctive, and while it may be admitted, and is I think true, that the words 'hinder' and 'delay' are synonymous (Read v. Worthington, 9 Bosw. [N. Y.] 628), it is not necessary, under the language of the statute itself, that any intent to defraud should be present. It is enough if any creditor is intentionally to be hindered or delayed. If the intent to hinder and delay exists, a conveyance made by an embarrassed debtor with a view, known to the purchaser, of securing the conveyed property from attachment, is voidable as against creditors, even though it be honestly made and the debtor intends, as Hughes says he did, that all creditors should be paid in full. Kimball v. Thompson, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 446, 50 Am. Dec. 799. This must necessarily be the correct view upon any consideration of language which traces its origin to the statute of Elizabeth; for a debtor's property is in legal theory subject to immediate process at the instance of any creditor, and a debtor will not be permitted to hinder or delay any creditor by any device which leaves his property, or the avails of it, subject to his control and disposition; and it makes no difference that the debtor intends to apply the avails of the same to the payment of his debts. It still remains true that he has hindered his debtors from applying the property in the way that they have a legal right to rely upon."

be considered in determining whether he did so in good faith, without intent to defraud.⁸⁸ The insolvency of the debtor at the time the transfer was made will not always of itself be sufficient to show intent to defraud or delay.⁸⁹ If a concealment be charged, the intent of the alleged bankrupt may be determined by the result of the act; but if the bankrupt fail to disclose the existence of the property, while retaining his control over it and claiming title thereto, the fact that he did not have a right to the property at the time may not be of much importance.⁹⁰ The burden of proving fraudulent intent is, of course, on him who asserts it.^{90a} Thus, in the absence of proof as to when or how assets were lost, the presumption is against fraud.⁹¹ There can be no intent to hinder, delay or defraud unless at the time the transfer was made the debtor knew or had reason to know of the existence of more than one creditor.⁹² The alleged bankrupt should be permitted to show that a deed which is relied upon as an act of bankruptcy, though absolute upon its face, was intended as a mere security and that there was no intent to defraud.⁹³

(6) INSOLVENCY.—We have already considered what constitutes insolvency,⁹⁴ and have also discussed the subject in respect generally to acts of bankruptcy under this section.⁹⁵ We will also hereafter under this section again refer to solvency as a defense to proceedings in bankruptcy and the proof necessary to establish the fact.⁹⁶ It is only necessary here to call attention to the fact that the insolvency of the debtor is not required to be shown. A person is not permitted to convey, transfer, conceal or remove any part of his property with intent to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors, and on becoming insolvent within four months thereafter, escape the bankruptcy law by showing that he was solvent when he so conveyed, transferred, concealed or removed his property.⁹⁷ The question is was he insolvent when the petition was filed. The act of bankruptcy is declared to consist of a transfer by the debtor with intent to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors. If the debtor shows that at the time of filing a petition in bankruptcy he was actually solvent it is a complete defense in a proceeding based upon the first act of bankruptcy.⁹⁸ The right of petitioning creditors to an adjudication against the debtor is only made out prima facie, when it is shown that within four months he has conveyed his property with intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors; for the debtor may then come in and prove that he was solvent when the petition was filed.⁹⁹

(7) CREDITORS OR ANY OF THEM.—The act under this subdivision must have been committed with intent to hinder, delay or defraud “his creditors or any of them.” This means a creditor who owns a judgment or claim provable in bankruptcy.¹⁰⁰ An unliquidated claim for tort, unreduced to judgment at the time of an alleged transfer, does not constitute the claimant a creditor so as to authorize him to insist that such transfer is an act of bankruptcy.¹⁰¹

(8) COMPARISON WITH OTHER SECTIONS.—If the fraudulent transfer is within four months of the filing of the petition, it is not only an act of bankruptcy but void under § 67-e; it is also an objection to discharge under § 14-b (4); and, if also voidable under the State laws, it may be set aside under § 70-e, and the property or its value recovered by proper proceedings begun within the limitations as to time fixed by the State statutes.¹⁰²

b. Second act of bankruptcy ; a preferential transfer.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The second act of bankruptcy consists of a debtor transferring while insolvent any portion of his property to one or more of his creditors with intent to prefer such creditor or creditors over his other creditors.^{102a} As in the case of the other acts of bankruptcy it must have been committed within the four months preceding the filing of the bankruptcy petition. The interdicted transaction here must be between a debtor and his creditors. Where at the time of the transfer there were no creditors, a subsequent creditor cannot complain.¹⁰³ An accommodation or other indorsers of a note of the alleged bankrupt are creditors, and preferential transfers to secure them fall within the act.¹⁰⁴ The act itself may not even be illegal or fraudulent. The debtor merely prefers to pay one creditor more than he does another.¹⁰⁵ The judicial definition of preference¹⁰⁶ is not controlling in this connection, for a preference which will

Insolvency; condition of bankruptcy, when determined.—The condition of a bankrupt at the time of the commission of the alleged acts of bankruptcy must be taken as the standard from which to view an alleged fraudulent transfer or other alleged act of bankruptcy “while insolvent” under section 3a of the bankruptcy act. But the condition of the bankrupt at the time of filing the petition is to be taken as the standard from which to test the defense of “solvency” in order to give jurisdiction in bankruptcy under section 3c of the bankruptcy act. be an act of bankruptcy is something other and more than one voidable under § 60-b. Thus, the intent to prefer on the part of the debtor may not be accompanied by reasonable cause to believe on the part of the creditor.¹⁰⁷ A preferential transfer under this subdivision, must consist of: (1) a transfer of property, (2) insolvency and (3) intent to prefer.¹⁰⁸ In addition to this it must be shown that the transfer results in the depletion of the debtor's estate,¹⁰⁹ and that the creditor to whom the transfer is made thereby secures an undue advantage over other creditors of the same class.¹¹⁰

(2) TRANSFER OF PROPERTY.—(I) In general.—"Transfer" as here used has the enlarged meaning given it by § 1 (95).¹¹¹ It is immaterial how the transfer is made. It may be either directly to the creditor or indirectly through a third person for his benefit.¹¹² Whatever may be the nature of the transaction, if the result of it is to procure to a creditor a preference over any other creditor it may be an act of bankruptcy.¹¹³ The result of the transaction controls its character. If one or more creditors are paid and others are left unpaid as a result of the transfer, the transfer constitutes an act of bankruptcy. As for instance, where an insolvent person conveys his property and the grantee applies the proceeds of the sale to pay certain creditors of the grantor in preference over others, such conveyance is a preferential transfer.¹¹⁴ A transfer by an insolvent partner of his entire separate estate in satisfaction of a debt of his firm which had no assets, constitutes a preference over other firm creditors of the same class and is an act of bankruptcy on the part of the partner.¹¹⁵

(II) Mortgage or security.—A chattel mortgage is more than a mere security; it is a sale of the thing mortgaged and operates as a transfer of it to the mortgagee, and if given within the four months' period with intent to prefer it is an act of bankruptcy.¹¹⁶ The execution of a trust mortgage during the four months' period to secure creditors who may become such between certain dates falls within the statute.¹¹⁷

(III) Payment of money.—There can be no question but that a payment of money by an insolvent is a transfer of property within the meaning of this subsection.¹¹⁸ Payments made by a corporation, however large, to creditors resulting in their preference over others will constitute an act of bankruptcy.¹¹⁹ Insubstantial payments of small amounts may be made under circumstances which would not constitute them preferential so as to make them acts of bankruptcy.¹²⁰ A preferential transfer of property to a creditor greater in value than the amount of the debt, the difference being paid in cash to the debtor, is an act of bankruptcy.¹²¹ And so also is the payment of one or more creditors in full to the exclusion of other creditors, out of the proceeds of the cash sale of the property of the debtor.¹²²

(IV) Confession of judgment.—A creditor who obtains a judgment which becomes a lien upon the debtor's property, thereby obtains security.¹²³ Under the definition of a transfer, [§ 1 (25)] any disposition of property by way of security constitutes a transfer. It would seem to follow that a debtor who aids a creditor in obtaining a judgment by means of which his debt is secured transfers his property. If this is done with intent to prefer, as where the debtor confesses judgment, and as a result the creditor obtains payment of his debt in preference over other creditors, the debtor has preferentially transferred his property within the second clause of subsection a.¹²⁴ The close connection between the confession of a judgment by an insolvent debtor, and the permitting a sufferance of a judgment in a legal proceeding must be noted. the fact that confession of judgment by the debtor is usually with intent to prefer the judgment creditor, brings the act within the second class of acts of bankruptcy, although it might also be included within the third class.¹²⁵

(V) Depletion of estate.—The preferential transfer must result in the depletion of the debtor's estate, so as to leave the other creditors without property out of which their claims may be paid. If there is no depletion of the estate the creditors cannot complain.¹²⁶ If the payments are essential to the continuance of the debtor in business, as for instance the payment of arrears of rent of the building occupied by the bankrupt, or payments made for advertisements upon which such business depends, they do not deplete the debtor's estate, and are not acts of bankruptcy.¹²⁷ The payment of unearned premiums on policies of insurance would amount to a depletion.¹²⁸ An agreement to insure goods and assign the policies to secure a creditor is not necessarily prejudicial to the other creditors, and an assignment of such policies made in pursuance thereof after the debtor became insolvent, is not an act of bankruptcy.¹²⁹ Where the transaction consists of merely making an exchange of securities it does not constitute an act of bankruptcy, for in such a case there is no satisfaction of a debt nor depletion of the debtor's estate.¹³⁰ A debtor must necessarily be allowed some liberty in the settlement of maturing obligations. Arrangements honestly made for the purpose of obtaining funds to pay such obligations so that the debtor's business may be continued in its regular course are not interdicted.¹³¹ So where a chattel mortgage or other security is given for a present loan, the money being applied by the alleged bankrupt in the regular transaction of his business,¹³² or for the security of notes given for the purchase price of merchandise added to the alleged bankrupt's stock of goods, it is not against the interests of other creditors as tending to

Chattel mortgage to cancel pre-existing mortgage.—A payment to a bank to take up a note, made from money loaned upon a chattel mortgage, the larger part of which was used to cancel a pre-existing mortgage on the same property, does not constitute a preference where, although the debtor was insolvent, it does not appear that he knew himself to be so, but notwithstanding that his creditors were pressing him for payment and his credit was very limited, he had quite a number of outstanding accounts, was endeavoring to pay his debts in full and the payment to the bank, which was small in comparison with his aggregate indebtedness, was made in the ordinary course of business, with the expectation on the part of the debtor of continuing his business and ultimately paying all of its obligations. deplete the estate and may not be deemed preferential.¹³³ The transfer must consist of the bankrupt's own property to constitute a preference; payment of a note of a bankrupt by an indorser would not be sufficient.¹³⁴ A renewal within the four months' period of a chattel mortgage, given as security for a pre-existing debt, is not an illegal preference.¹³⁵ A payment by an attorney, out of his own funds, of a claim against his client, which does not deplete his client's estate is not a preference constituting an act of bankruptcy.¹³⁶ The payment of a relatively small amount as a bonus for a loan secured by a chattel mortgage, although unlawful as between the alleged bankrupt and his mortgagee is not a preference constituting an act of bankruptcy.¹³⁷

(3) INTENT TO PREFER.—To authorize an adjudication of bankruptcy it must appear that the transfer alleged to constitute an act of bankruptcy was made with the intent to prefer the creditor to whom it was given; if no such intent exists it may be a preference but it is not an act of bankruptcy.¹³⁸ As indicated in the preceding paragraph, ordinary business transactions by a going concern, necessary for the continuance of the business are not prohibited, even if it happen that through some circumstance the debtor become insolvent. Payments to creditors in an ordinary business way made by a debtor who did not regard himself as insolvent, are not necessarily made with intent to prefer.¹³⁹ If a mortgage is given to a person not a creditor to secure advances made in the payment of debts, and the mortgagor believed at the time that she had ample property to meet all demands against her, it is not a preference.¹⁴⁰ The intent will be presumed when the transaction consists of a transfer of personal property by way of payment.¹⁴¹ If the bankrupt did not know of an alleged claim against him when he made payments to his only other creditors in due course of business, such payments were not made with intent to prefer and do not constitute acts of bankruptcy.¹⁴² If a debtor did not know of a claim against him, he cannot have intended to give a preference against such claim; but there is a strong presumption that he does know whether a claim is paid.¹⁴³ The intent of the creditor to whom the preferential transfer is made is not material; it need not be shown that the creditor knew or had reasonable grounds to believe that the transfer was preferential.¹⁴⁴ The intent of a corporation may be presumed from the knowledge and acts of its officers and agents.^{144a} The question of intent is one for the jury.¹⁴⁵

(4) PROOF OF INTENT.—As in the case of a transfer to hinder, delay and defraud creditors, the intent to prefer may be implied from the actual result of the transaction.¹⁴⁶ One is presumed to intend the probable consequences of his acts,—that is, those consequences which would naturally follow, and which a person of ordinary intelligence would expect as the natural result thereof; this presumption is of weight in determining the debtor's intent to prefer, and has been frequently applied.¹⁴⁷ If the debtor knows that he is insolvent he must be presumed to know that a transfer made to one creditor to the exclusion of others will result in a preference, without regard to his actual intent in making such transfer.¹⁴⁸ Payment of a claim by one knowing himself to be insolvent raises a conclusive presumption of intent to prefer;¹⁴⁹ if it be shown that it was made in the honest belief that he is solvent, the burden shifts to the creditors.¹⁵⁰ Where a preference is given with the approval of

He cannot be heard to say that he did not intend to do a thing when the necessary and logical consequence of his act was to do that very thing."

Presumption where transfer is made by insolvent.—Where a debtor known to be insolvent transfers a large portion of his property to one creditor to the exclusion of others, such transaction must be taken as conclusive of an intent to give a preference. In re McGee (D. C., N. Y.), 5 Am. B. R. 262, 105 Fed. 895. The debtor's intent to give a preference may be presumed from a transfer, while insolvent, of a large portion of his property to a single creditor. When this is proved, the burden is upon him to show that he was ignorant of his insolvency and had reason to believe that he could pay his debts in full. In re Rome Planing Mills (D. C., N. Y.), 3 Am. B. R. 123, 96 Fed. 812. If a merchant is hopelessly insolvent during the four months preceding the filing of a petition in involuntary bankruptcy against him, and with knowledge of such condition of insolvency pays to certain of his creditors substantial sums of money in full satisfaction of their claims, and denies payment to others whose claims are due and equally entitled to payment he has committed an act of bankruptcy under this clause (§ 3-a (2)). His payments under such circumstances inevitably result in giving the creditors so favored a preference over the others. The debtor is presumed to intend the necessary results of his own intelligent acts. Rex Buggy Co. v. Hearick (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 12 Am. B. R. 726, 132 Fed. 310. See Johnson v. Wald (C. C. Proof of knowledge of insolvency.—In order to charge a debtor with having committed an act of bankruptcy in the giving of a preference by the payment to a creditor of a past-due account, it is necessary to show that he intended thereby to give such creditor more than the other creditors would get; and this element is not met by showing that he ought to have thought so; but where it appears that though the debtor hoped to overcome a temporary embarrassment, yet knew that the result was very doubtful, and did not make such payment to carry his affairs through successfully, he must be deemed to have intended a preference. certain creditors such creditors are estopped from objecting to the transfer as an act of bankruptcy.¹⁵¹ It is possible that, under the new definition of insolvency, one may not always know the fair valuation of his property, and, therefore, may not be able to show that he knew whether he was solvent or not. But the presumption is that a person has knowledge of his financial condition.¹⁵² If a debtor honestly believes himself to be solvent when the transfer is made, or if he establishes his want of knowledge of his insolvency, the presumption of an intent to prefer is rebutted.¹⁵³ Where an insolvent debtor, before the entry of judgment on a verdict against him, gives a mortgage to secure another creditor, the intent to prefer will be presumed.¹⁵⁴ If a debtor, while insolvent, transfers all or nearly all his property to some of his creditors, leaving others unprovided for, the intent to prefer will be presumed.¹⁵⁵ The effect of this presumption will vary according to the proportionate amount of the transfer,¹⁵⁶ and is not conclusive.¹⁵⁷ If the amount of the transfer is comparatively small and it does not materially deplete the estate, the intent to prefer will not be presumed.¹⁵⁸ The circumstance that a mortgage executed within the four months' period was not recorded for a considerable time thereafter may be considered in determining whether such mortgage con-

A payment to a bank to take up a note, made from money loaned upon a chattel mortgage, the larger part of which was used to cancel a pre-existing mortgage on the same property, does not constitute a preference where, although the debtor was insolvent, it does not appear that he knew himself to be so, but notwithstanding that his creditors were pressing him for payment and his credit was very limited, he had quite a number of outstanding accounts, was endeavoring to pay his debts in full and the payment to the bank, which was small in comparison with his aggregate indebtedness, was made in the ordinary course of business, with the expectation on the part of the debtor of continuing his business and ultimately paying all of its obligations. Intent to prefer by transfer of large part of property.—In the case of Toof v. Martin, 13 Wall. 40, 20 L. Ed. 481, the court said: "The transfer in any case by the debtor of a large part of all his property while he is insolvent, to one creditor without making provision for an equal distribution of its proceeds to all his creditors necessarily operates as a preference to him and must be taken as conclusive evidence that a preference was intended, unless the debtor can show that he was at the time ignorant of his insolvency, and that his affairs were such that he could reasonably expect to pay all his debts."

stitutes an act of bankruptcy.¹⁵⁹ Where the proof is that the property was transferred to a mortgagee who was a creditor in an amount larger than the value of the property transferred, the presumption of intent to prefer will be negated.¹⁶⁰ If insolvency at the time of the transfer is not shown, the question of intent is immaterial.¹⁶¹

(5) INTENT AS DISTINGUISHED FROM MOTIVE.—There must be design to give an advantage. Where the transfer is in pursuance of an effort to extricate the transferor from his embarrassments, it will not be held a preference.¹⁶² Likewise, where the physical transfer is in pursuance of a valid contract antedating the bankruptcy.¹⁶³ But a transfer is not less a preference because given in answer to a request or in fulfillment of a prior promise made at the time of contracting the debt.¹⁶⁴ Evidence of a failure to record a mortgage until several months after its execution may justify a finding that it was given with an intent to prefer.¹⁶⁵ So whatever may have been the motive in making the transfer, it is immaterial as bearing upon the question of intent. However honest or proper may have been the motive, yet if the intent to prefer exists and is coupled with the other essential elements, an act of bankruptcy is the result.¹⁶⁶

(6) ALLEGATIONS AS TO PREFERENCE.—The specific facts as to the preference relied on to constitute an act of bankruptcy must be alleged.¹⁶⁷ The petition should allege the amounts paid and to whom.¹⁶⁸ It should also allege that the alleged act was committed with an intent to prefer.¹⁶⁹

c. Third act of bankruptcy; preference through legal proceedings.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The third act of bankruptcy consists of a person having “suffered or permitted while insolvent any creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings, and not having five days before a sale or final disposition of any property affected by such preference vacated or discharged such preference.” If any of these elements, i. e. (1) insolvency, (2) suffering or permitting a creditor to obtain a preference through a legal proceeding, (3) not avoiding the preference five days before the sale, where (4) the property to be sold is affected by such preference, is missing, the act is not an act of bankruptcy under this clause.¹⁷⁰ This has been well termed the passive act of bankruptcy. It differs from the corresponding act in the law of 1867, in that intent is not material. It is in harmony with § 67-f, under which liens through legal proceedings are void, irrespective of intent on the part of the debtor, or pressure due to knowledge, on part of the creditor. There is a similar provision in the Canadian Bankruptcy Act of 1919.¹⁷¹ The corresponding clause in the English bankruptcy act is also of interest.¹⁷² The Torrey bill in its last form,¹⁷³ and the Henderson substitute, contained words which seems to include these two foreign provisions. The exact phrasing of the present law did not appear until the bill had been agreed to in conference committee. Changes narrowing its scope were then made. In spite of them, it is the most virile and available of the acts of bankruptcy.

(2) COMPARISON WITH THE ACT OF 1867.—Section 39 of that act provided that an insolvent who should “procure or suffer his property to be taken on legal proceedings, with intent to give a preference to one or more

Elements constituting act of bankruptcy under subdivision a (3).—The act of bankruptcy defined by section 3a (3) of the Bankruptcy Act consists of three elements. The first is the insolvency of the debtor; the second is suffering or permitting a creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings; that is, to acquire a lien upon property of the debtor by means of a judgment, attachment, execution or kindred proceeding, the enforcement of which will enable the creditor to collect a greater percentage of his claim than other creditors of the same class; and the third is the failure of the debtor to vacate or discharge the lien and resulting preference five days before a sale or final disposition of any property affected. Only through the combination of the three elements is the act of bankruptcy committed. Insolvency alone does not suffice, nor is it enough that it be coupled with suffering or permitting a creditor to obtain a preference by legal proceeding. The third element must also be present else there is no act of bankruptcy within the meaning of this provision. Citizens Banking Co. v. Ravenna Natl. Bank, 234 U. S. 360, 32 Am. B. R. 477, 58 L. Ed. 1352.

172. Eng. Bankruptcy Act of 1890. § 1, provides that: “A debtor commits an act of bankruptcy if execution against him has been levied by seizure of his goods under process in an action in any court, or in any civil proceeding in the high court, and the goods have been either sold or held by the sheriff for twenty-one days.”

173. S. 1035, introduced by Senator Lindsay, March 23, 1897.

of his creditors" thereby committed an act of bankruptcy; and, by § 35, it was provided that any attachment or seizure under execution of a person's property "procured by him" with a view to give a preference, should be void. The doubt which long divided the lower courts as to the meaning of these clauses was finally settled in Wilson v. City Bank,¹⁷⁴ wherein the Supreme Court held that no intent could be inferred from the mere neglect of the alleged bankrupt, properly sued on a just claim, to interpose an answer when there was no valid defense; and, therefore, that that intent which was an essential element of this act of bankruptcy could not be predicated on mere passive non-residence. This case has been the storm-center of the decisions on the subsection now under consideration.

(3) INTENT NOT ESSENTIAL.—On the question as to whether intent is an element in this act of bankruptcy, the earlier and most of the later cases have held that intent had been dropped out, and that result,—the inequity flowing from the transaction, rather than the animus of it—had been substituted instead.¹⁷⁵ Two decisions, however, held to the older doctrine, that mere passivity was not enough.¹⁷⁶ The earlier case seems to have been decided without the difference between the statutes being noted; the later is of great ability and for a time substituted doubt for what had grown to be certainty. The question reached the Supreme Court late in 1901, and was then settled by a five-to-four decision in Wilson Bros. v. Nelson,¹⁷⁷ which, reversing the court below, upholds the majority of the previous cases, and finally determines that intent is not an element of pleading or proof where the third act of bankruptcy is relied on.¹⁷⁸ As therein stated the act "makes the result obtained by the creditor and not the intent of the Result and not intent essential fact.—The court in this case drew a distinction between the present act and the act of 1867, and noted the effect of omitting certain phrases, which, under the earlier act, clearly indicated that a preference must have been intended by the act of procuring or suffering property to be taken on legal proceedings. The court said: "The act of 1898 differs from that of 1867 in wholly omitting the clauses 'with intent to give a preference to one or more of his creditors' or 'to defeat or delay the operation of this act;' and in substituting for the words 'procures or suffers his property to be taken on legal process,' the words 'suffered or permitted while insolvent, any creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings,' and not having, five days before a sale of the property affected, 'vacated or discharged such preference.' . . . Taking together all the provisions of the act of 1898 on this subject and contrasting them with the provisions of the act of 1867, there can be no doubt of their meaning. The third clause of § 3, omitting the word 'procure,' and the phrase 'intent to give a preference,' of the former statute, makes it an act of bankruptcy if the debtor has 'suffered or permitted, while insolvent, any creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings,' and has not 'vacated or discharged such preference' five days before a sale of the property. . . . This act of 1898 makes the result obtained by the creditor, and not the intent of the debtor, the essential fact."

debtor the essential fact.”¹⁷⁹ In other words, it is now the settled law that an insolvent may be thrown into bankruptcy by the requisite number of his creditors, if a judgment has been entered against him, execution issued and levy made, and sale five or less days away, irrespective of whether he procured or merely could not prevent the judgment against him. This, from the creditor's standpoint, is the high-water mark of Anglo-Saxon “acts of bankruptcy.”¹⁸⁰

(4) SUFFERED OR PERMITTED.—“Suffered or permitted” includes passive non-resistance as well as non-ability to resist.¹⁸¹ A debtor who does not pay a lawful debt when due, and stands by while his creditor secures a judgment against him, and levies upon his property, “suffers and permits” such judgment to be taken, and such levy to be made, and commits an act of bankruptcy under this clause.¹⁸² The mere fact of resistance by defense conducted in good faith is not material.¹⁸³ And even though an appeal is Preference by legal proceedings; intent.—While a preference effected through judicial proceedings may constitute an act of bankruptcy either under subdivision a (3) or a (2) of section 3 of the Bankruptcy Act, the two subdivisions do not necessarily overlap. The distinction is to be found in the presence or absence of an actual intent on the part of the debtor to give a preference. If he has acted in such a way as to give a preference with the intent and purpose so to do, it is immaterial by what means such purpose is accomplished. In such case the act falls within subdivision a (2). But, if, through legal proceedings, a preference has in fact been permitted or procured, but without any intent or purpose on the part of the debtor to give it, then the act falls within the terms of subdivision a (3). Matter of Musgrove Mining Co. (D. C., Idaho), 37 Am. B. R. 628, 234 Fed. 99. See Am. B. R. Digest, § 175.

183. Bradley Timber Co. v. White (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 10 Am. B. R. 329, 121 Fed. 779.

Fact of resistance.—In the case of Bradley Timber Co. v. White (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 10 Am. B. R. 329, 121 Fed. 779, the court said: “Whether or not an insolvent makes resistance to legal proceedings of a creditor to obtain preference is not very material. It may show good faith on his part, but the act of bankruptcy declared in the law is ‘suffering or permitting,’ a judgment which will result in a preference, and a failure to vacate the same within at least five days before a sale or disposition of the property affected by such preference. The Bankrupt Law seeks to prevent and, if obtained, by any means, to set aside preferences obtained against an insolvent within four months; and, in order to effect an equal distribution of the insolvent's property among creditors, it contemplates a resort to the bankruptcy court in all cases of such preferences, no matter whether the bankrupt has consented thereto or opposed the same. If the bankrupt fails to discharge a preference obtained through legal proceedings within at least five days before the property affected by the pref-taken from the judgment, a failure to vacate it may be a preference, no attempt being made to stay an execution and sale by giving security on appeal, and it appearing prima facie that the debtor was insolvent.¹⁸⁴ The failure to vacate or discharge the lien of an attachment at least five days before a sale or final disposition of the property attached, where the lien was created by attachment proceedings instituted more than four months prior to the filing of an involuntary petition, does not constitute an act of bankruptcy.¹⁸⁵

(5) CREDITORS TO BE AFFECTED.—A creditor must have been preferred over other creditors by this act of bankruptcy.¹⁸⁶ The term "creditor" is defined in § 1 (9). The creditor preferred must have a provable claim;¹⁸⁷ a surety on a bond given by a corporation to secure claims for services of laborers on a public work is a creditor, and a judgment and sale in favor of the surety is a preference constituting an act of bankruptcy.¹⁸⁸ Where it is shown that the petitioning creditors induced a judgment creditor to levy execution on his judgment, they are estopped from setting up such levy as an act of bankruptcy.¹⁸⁹

(6) PREFERENCE.—"Preference" as used in this subsection refers to a resultant inequality between creditors of the same class.¹⁹⁰ The intent and purpose of this act of bankruptcy is, like all the others, to avoid a preference and to provide for an equal distribution of the debtor's property among his creditors.¹⁹¹ If the proceedings do not result in such inequality the debtor is not subject to attack.¹⁹² For instance if the property is not subject to sale under execution and the levy is therefore invalid, the proceedings do not result in a preference, and do not fall within this clause.¹⁹³ The preference must be to a creditor over other creditors of the same class, so where a landlord distrains for his rent he does not procure a preference, since he is the only creditor of his class and is entitled to the priority which the law affords him.¹⁹⁴

erence is disposed of, that is an act of bankruptcy, and on proof of the same the insolvent may be adjudged a bankrupt."

Result, a preference.—A preference may consist not only in bankrupt's procuring or suffering a judgment to be entered against him or making a transfer of his property within four months of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, but also in the creation of a lien by way of attachment, or the confession of a judgment within four months of the filing of the petition, the existence and enforcement of which will work a preference. *Folger v. (7) LEGAL PROCEEDINGS.—(I) In general.—“Legal proceedings” means proceedings in a court to assert a legal remedy or obtain an equitable relief.¹⁹⁵ They include all proceedings in a court of justice interlocutory or final, whereby the property of a debtor is seized and diverted from his general creditors.¹⁹⁶ The issuance of execution and a levy under a confession of judgment are “legal proceedings” within the clause.¹⁹⁷

(II) Attachment proceedings.—Attachment proceedings are legal proceedings within the meaning of the clause.¹⁹⁸ Attachment proceedings which have not been followed by a judgment are not of themselves sufficient; there must be an actual determination of the claim and the consequent judgment, execution, levy and a day of sale appointed.¹⁹⁹

(III) Receivership; supplementary proceedings.—A suit in a State court for the appointment of a receiver whereby certain creditors were preferred is

A confession of judgment by a debtor may under certain circumstances constitute a transfer and if made with intent to prefer would constitute an act of bankruptcy under clause a(2) of this section. In re Truitt (D. C., Md.), 29 Am. B. R. 570, 203 Fed. 550; In re Nusbaum (D. C., N. Y.), 18 Am. B. R. 598, 152 Fed. 835. See Am. Bankr. R. Dig., § 181.

Allegations as to confession of judgment.—A petition, alleging as an act of bankruptcy, that the debtor confessed a judgment with an intent to prefer, is not insufficient for failure to set forth the facts and circumstances from which such intent may be inferred. Matter of Musgrove Mining Co. (D. C., Idaho), 37 Am. B. R. 628, 234 Fed. 99.

Attachment proceedings.—In the case of In re Crafts-Riordan Shoe Co. (D. C., Mass.), 26 Am. B. R. 449, 185 Fed. 931, it appeared that, within the four months' period, a plaintiff in a suit against the bankrupt had obtained an attachment lien upon property of the bankrupt which was sold simply because it could not be kept without great and disproportionate expense, but no judgment against the bankrupt was obtained prior to bankruptcy. It was held that the fact that bankrupt failed to vacate the attachment at least five days before such sale did not create a preference constituting an act of bankruptcy within section 3-a (3) since there was no “final disposition” of the property and such section was not intended to include sales which merely substitute money for property without rendering the alleged preference obtained by the attachment any more effective than it was before the sale. In this case the court said: “In the cases which have held preferences to have been obtained through legal proceedings, and an attachment has formed part of the proceedings, the attachment has been either after judgment in the suit, or, if before judgment, has been followed by a judgment before the petition in bankruptcy, so that the attachment lien has passed beyond the stage during which it remains wholly uncertain whether there is really any claim against the defendant or not.”

In the case of Parmenter Mfg. Co. v. Stoevers (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 3 Am. B. R. 220, 97 Fed. 330, 38 C. C. A. 200, there had been such an attachment more than four months before the involuntary petition. This had been followed by judgment, execution, seizure, and sale within the four-month period. In affirming adjudication on the petition, it was said that the preference permitted was the execution sale, and that the four-month period referred to in the statute ran, not from the attachment, but “from a date connected with the proceedings after judgment.” If the sale constituted the preference, no preference was obtained merely by the attachment, and none until there had at least been judgment in the suit. See also In re Harper (D. C., Ill.), 5 Am. B. R. 576, 105 Fed. 960; In re Windt (D. C., Conn.), 24 Am. B. R. 536, 177 Fed. 584.

Failure to vacate attachment lien.—Although the mere suffering or permitting, while insolvent, a creditor to obtain a preference, alone does not constitute an act of bankruptcy under section 3-a (3), but the debtor must have failed at least five days before a sale or final disposition of the property to have vacated or discharged such preference, it is incumbent upon an insolvent person to discharge or vacate a lien, secured such a proceeding,²⁰⁰ and so also are supplementary proceedings whereby a debtor of a judgment debtor is directed to pay a certain amount to the sheriff to apply on the judgment.²⁰¹

(IV) Distress for rent; statutory liens.—A distraint of goods under a landlord's warrant is not "a legal proceeding" under this clause.²⁰² Where distraint is allowed it exists because of a lien upon the property found upon the leased premises.²⁰³ The rule is that a proceeding to enforce a statutory lien which is not in any way affected by the adjudication of bankruptcy does not fall within this clause.²⁰⁴

(8) SALE OR DISPOSITION.—"Sale or final disposition" as used in this clause means an act having the effect of a sale, whereby the ownership and control of the property is transferred from one person to another;²⁰⁵ an insolvent debtor does not commit an act of bankruptcy, rendering him subject to involuntary adjudication, by mere inaction for the period of four months after the levy of an execution on his real estate. Such inaction does not amount to a "final disposition."²⁰⁶ If the transaction is fictitious, invalid or otherwise ineffectual, because the proceedings are unauthorized so that the estate of the debtor is not depleted, or the rights of creditors affected, it does not constitute a sale or disposition.²⁰⁷ The securing by a creditor of the amount of his claim through attachment in execution proceedings is a "final disposition of any property affected by such preference," as effectually as if he had received payment from the proceeds of a sale under a writ.²⁰⁸ The

by an attachment upon his property, at least five days before a period of four months expires following the date of the levy of such attachment, and if he fails to do so he commits an act of bankruptcy. Folger v. Putnam (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 28 Am. B. R. 173, 194 Fed. 793. This case seems to have been overruled in effect by Citizens Banking Co. v. Ravenna Nat. Bank, 234 U. S. 360, 32 Am. B. R. 477.

The failure of an alleged bankrupt to release the levy of an attachment upon his supposed interest in property transferred by him nearly seven years previously does not constitute an act of bankruptcy, even though followed by averments that such transfer was a fraudulent one. Matter of Murphy (D. R. 583, 148 Fed. 657, the court said: "Under the law of Virginia, the right of the landlord to distraint the property of the tenant for rent has a priority over any lien created on such property after it is carried onto the leased premises. In other words, as we understand the Virginia statute, the lien of the landlord for rent attaches to the property of the tenant as soon as it is placed on the premises, and this lien continues and is capable of being enforced in the manner and under the conditions provided in the statute. It has priority over all other liens subsequently created and retains this position of dignity provided the landlord pursues his right in apt time. It has been held that the preference by legal proceedings contemplated by the Bankruptcy Act does not include a levy upon a judgment of foreclosure of a lien which affects only the property bound by the lien."

"final disposition" of the property of the debtor may take place without a sale, in which case the time of the disposition is the day that the property finally passed irrevocably from the control of the debtor.²⁰⁰ But as held by the Supreme Court the term signifies an affirmative act of disposal, not a mere lapse of time which leaves the lien intact and still requiring enforcement.²¹⁰

(9) VACATING OR DISCHARGING PREFERENCE.—(I) In general.—It is not the judgment itself, or the levy thereunder, which constitutes the act of bankruptcy, but the failure on the part of the debtor to have the same vacated or discharged five days before a sale or final disposition of the property.²¹¹ The act of bankruptcy seems to be consummated five days before the sale, if at that time the levy has not been lifted; the sale having been noticed, and nothing having been done by the judgment debtor to set aside the preference, the creditors may file a petition against him; they are not required to wait for the sale.²¹²

Final disposition.—In the case of In re Tupper (D. C., N. Y.), 20 Am. B. R. 824, 829, 163 Fed. 766, the court said: "It seems to me that effect is to be given to the words 'the final disposition of any property affected by such preference.' The 'final disposition' is not a gift of the property to some third person, or a voluntary transfer to the creditor in satisfaction of a preferential judgment as that would be merely a sale in payment. Congress had in mind when it enacted this law, the fact that there are different ways or modes of disposing of property, of enforcing executions, judgments, liens, and it referred to the ordinary method of disposition by way of sale, and then used the words 'or final disposition,' to cover every other method of passing the control and dominion of the property from the debtor, insolvent person, to another or to others, either absolutely or as security to the preferred creditor, to the exclusion of his other creditors. The purpose of the law is that no one creditor shall be preferred over the others by an insolvent person, but that all creditors shall share equally, except as to honest liens created more than four months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy. It was not intended that a creditor should obtain a lien on all the real estate of an insolvent person, by a judgment filed and docketed, and then lie still, without issuing execution or making a levy and advertising the property for sale for four months, and until such judgment had become unimpeachable under the bankruptcy act or otherwise, thereby gaining a preference, an absolute security for the debt, and it might be to the extent of the entire property of the insolvent person, and thus excluding other creditors from any share in the estate. It has been held that the advertised, or even proposed sale is not in all cases necessary under subdivision 3 of § 3." Citing In re Harper (D. C., Ill.), 5 Am. B. Failure to discharge by partnership.—Where an execution was levied upon the property of an insolvent partnership after its dissolution the failure to discharge the levy constitutes an act of bankruptcy by all the members of the firm, for which it and all the partners may be adjudged bankrupt. *Holmes v. Validity of execution.—Where the only ground upon which creditors claimed an adjudication in bankruptcy was that of preferring an execution creditor by failing to discharge the lien, and where the testimony of the deputy sheriff shows clearly that he made on actual levy and the alleged bankrupt protested against the levy from the beginning and had a right to have its validity determined by a proper tribunal,

(II) Day set for sale.—It must appear that the sale or final disposition of the property had been arranged for before the act of bankruptcy may be consummated.²¹³ "Five days before a sale" has been held to mean the same as "five days before the day set for the sale."²¹⁴ This enlargement of meaning would seem essential to carry out the clear intent of the act; if a petition could not be filed until after the actual sale, creditors would often be remediless.²¹⁵ The debtor has all of the fifth day prior to the sale or disposition on which to vacate or discharge the preference.²¹⁶ If he fails so to do the act of bankruptcy is then complete and a petition may then be filed against him.²¹⁷ There must be a legal notice or advertisement of the sale specifying the day when it is to take place.²¹⁸ Until some day is authoritatively fixed for the sale or disposition, the time for the consummation of this act of bankruptcy does not commence to run.²¹⁹ It has been held, however, that where a preference was obtained through legal proceedings, and the insolvent debtor has put it out of his power to procure the vacating or discharging of such preferences, an act of bankruptcy has been committed.²²⁰

(III) Time when lien obtained immaterial.—There is nothing in the provisions of subdivision a (3) which suggests that the time when the lien is obtained has any bearing upon when the property must be freed from it to avoid an act of bankruptcy. It will suffice if the lien is lifted five days before a sale or final disposition of any of the property affected. This is so notwithstanding the provisions of sections 3-b, 67-c, and 67-f of the bankruptcy act.²²¹

(10) CONSTRUCTION OF SUBSECTION.—The courts have interpreted this subdivision broadly. A payment of money to a sheriff by a debtor of the judgment debtor against whom an execution has been issued is a technical levy and available as an act of bankruptcy.²²² So also is a garnishee process issued after execution unsatisfied.²²³ So also is failure to pay matured judgment the act of bankruptcy alleged, was not committed. In re Bodek (D. C., Pa.), 26 Am. B. R. 476, 188 Fed. 817.

Securing claim through attachment in execution.—The securing of the creditor of notes followed by entry of judgment and execution issued.²²⁴ Though the judgment is more than four months old, the levy, if within that period, followed by a sale, is an act of bankruptcy.²²⁵ But a mere entry of judgment without the issue of an execution is not.²²⁶ The enforcement of a lien of a judgment obtained prior to the enactment of the bankruptcy act by the issue of an execution is not a preference and the provisions of § 3-a (3) do not apply.²²⁷

d. Fourth act of bankruptcy; a general assignment or receivership.—(1) IN GENERAL.—By subsection 4 of this section an act of bankruptcy is committed by a person having made “a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors, or, being insolvent, applied for a receiver or trustee for his property or because of insolvency a receiver or trustee has been put in charge of his property under the laws of a State, of a territory, or of the United States.” The making of a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, with or without preferences, has been an act of bankruptcy for over one hundred years.²²⁸ Though not so in words under the law of 1867, late in the history of that statute it was quite generally held that, being a palpable fraud on the law, it was an act of bankruptcy.²²⁹ While, under the decisions, there would seem little doubt that a general assignment is an act of bankruptcy, because intended to hinder or delay creditors,²³⁰ this new clause, § 3-a (4), removes all question and is an affirmative declaration of great importance to the system. Such an assignment, whether of a person or copartnership, or of one of that class of corporations mentioned in § 4-b, even though without preferences, is now, if made within four months of the filing of the petition, a constructive fraud on the act,²³¹ and, in itself, without either insolvency or intent, an available act of bankruptcy.²³² This does not mean that general assignments are no longer lawful; rather, that the assignor and his counsel thereby set the door of the court of bankruptcy ajar to such creditors as may choose to enter.²³³ Fraud is not imputed by the mere act of making a general assignment; the purpose of the debtor may be laudable, and under certain circumstances will be allowed to stand, so that the debtor's estate may be administered outside of a court of bankruptcy, to the mutual advantage of all concerned.²³⁴

(2) WHAT CONSTITUTES A GENERAL ASSIGNMENT.—A general assignment to constitute an act of bankruptcy under this subsection must be for the benefit "of creditors." A direct transfer to creditors after the intervention of a trustee duly appointed, is not such an assignment.²³⁵ A general assignment for the benefit of creditors is one which transfers all or substantially all of the debtor's property to another person in trust to collect the amounts owing to the assignor, with power to sell and convey the property, to distribute the proceeds among the creditors of the assignor, and to return the surplus, if any, to the debtor.²³⁶ A formal deed of assignment is not required.²³⁷ A debtor may have prepared a deed of assignment with intent to execute it, but so long as he has left it unexecuted or in escrow, the general assignment con-

233. Assignments not unlawful.—In the case of In re Chase (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 10 Am. B. R. 677, 124 Fed. 753, 59 C. C. A. 629, it was held that a general common-law assignment for the benefit of creditors, directing an equal distribution among them, without any attempt to defraud or embarrass persons to whom the assignor is under liability, is not contrary to the policy of the bankruptcy law. See also Randolph v. Scruggs, 190 U. S. 533, 10 Am. B. R. 1, holding that an assignment for the benefit of creditors cannot be taken to have been prohibited by the bankruptcy law absolutely in every event. Summers v. Abbott (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 10 Am. B. R. 254, 122 Fed. 36; In re Fish Bros. Wagon Co. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 21 Am. B. R. 149, 164 Fed. 553; Matter of Creech Bros. Lumber Co. (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 39 Am. B. R. 487, 240 Fed. 8.

Accounting by assignee, on commission of new act of bankruptcy.—Where an assignment for benefit of creditors is made under a State law, recognized by the highest court of the State as valid and subsisting, and is assented to by all of the existing creditors, and no petition in bankruptcy is filed within the four months' limit of the Bankruptcy Act, the assignment cannot be set aside and the assignee compelled to account for all the property transferred by the deed of assignment, under a petition for adjudication by a consenting creditor predicated upon new credits and a new act of bankruptcy. Matter of Bridge (D. C., Wash.), 37 Am. B. R. 53, 250 Fed. 174.

234. Assignment does not result in bankruptcy.—In the case of Summers v. Abbott (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 10 Am. B. R. 254, 122 Fed. 366, the court said "The bankrupt act declares the making of a general assignment for the benefit of creditors shall constitute an act of bankruptcy, but it nowhere declares that when the debtor has committed an act of bankruptcy he shall go into the bankrupt court and have himself adjudged a bankrupt. Many debtors who commit acts of bankruptcy struggle on and finally pay all the debts they owe, which is more than would have been done had they gone into the bankrupt court and had themselves adjudged bankrupts. It is open to the creditors of one who has committed an act of bankruptcy to proceed to have him adjudged a bankrupt, but it is optional and not obligatory upon his creditors to do this. As a matter of fact, thousands of debtors commit acts of bankruptcy who are never adjudged bankrupts; their creditors preferring to let their debtor administer his own estate, rather than turn it over to a bankruptcy court."

Avoiding attachments.—The Bankruptcy Act recognizes the right of the bankrupt to make a voluntary assignment of his property, with the purpose of avoiding attachments, and thereby securing an equal distribution of his property among all his creditors, and it cannot be predicated of such proceeding that its purpose is to defraud the attaching creditors. Bell v. Blessing (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 35 Am. B. R. 672, 225 Fed. 750.

Formal instrument not required.—The term general assignment, within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, is to be taken in its generic sense, and embraces any conveyance at common law or by statute by which one intends an absolute and unconditional appropriation of all his property to pay his creditors, share and share alike. The assignment need not be formal, and it is not necessary that it should be valid for all purposes, but an absolute transfer by the debtor of both the legal and equitable titles is indispensable. Matter of Matthews & Co. (D. C., N. J.), 36 Am. B. R. 501, 229 Fed. 309.

templated has not been made.²³⁸ But it is not essential that all the creditors accept the terms imposed by the instrument, if it appears on its face to have been a disposition of all the property of the assignor for the benefit of his creditors.²³⁹ As already indicated the insolvency of the debtor is not an essential fact.²⁴⁰ Whatever may be the form of the conveyance in trust of the debtor's property, if it cover all his property and be for the payment of Delivery of deed of assignment.—Where a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors has not been delivered, the fact that the assignee acquires possession of a very small part of the property under a misapprehension as to his rights, does not constitute an act of bankruptcy. A general assignment for the benefit of creditors has not been made within the purview of the Bankruptcy Act where the deed of assignment is left in escrow under the condition that it is not to be delivered until all of the creditors agree to the assignment. Carpenter & Co. v. Lybrand (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 36 Am. B. R. 12, 230 Fed. 84.

239. Acceptance of assignment by creditors.—In the case of In re Courtenay Mercantile Co. (D. C., N. Dak.), 26 Am. B. R. 365, 186 Fed. 352, it appeared that a corporation made a deed of assignment for the benefit of "those of its creditors who shall become parties thereto;" the assignee accepted the trust, and took possession of the property; some of the creditors did not assent to the terms of the deed. It was held that as to the assignor the assignment was valid and that it therefore constituted a general assignment under the Bankruptcy Act, notwithstanding its invalidity as to dissenting creditors. The court said: "On the face of the instrument here involved, it was a disposition of all the property of the assignor for the benefit of his creditors. All the creditors had a right to accept its benefits. The assignor could in no way control this discretion. Their right to do this would continue until the estate had been distributed. The character of the instrument should be judged as of the time of its execution and delivery. Otherwise the whole estate could be converted into cash, and administered under the deed, without its being possible to ascertain whether it was an assignment for the benefit of creditors, or a security for a part of the creditors. Such a construction of the instrument would make it possible for any creditor to escape the provisions of the Federal Bankruptcy Act by the mere phrasing of a general assignment of his property. When a debtor assigns all his property in trust for the benefit of his creditors, provided they elect to accept the terms of the deed, he makes a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, within the meaning of section 3 of the Bankruptcy Act. It is not necessary that the assignment be valid as to the dissenting creditors. Griffin v. Dut- ton (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 21 Am. B. R. 449, 165 Fed. 626, 91 C. C. A. 614; Canner v. Webster-Tapper Co. (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 21 Am. B. R. 872, 168 Fed. 519, 93 C. C. A. 541. If it is binding upon the assignor, and has the characteristics mentioned, it subjects the person or corporation making it to an involuntary proceeding under the Federal Bankruptcy Act."

240. Solvency no defense.—In the case of West Co. v. Lea, 2 Am. B. R. 463, 174 U. S. 594, the court said: "Our conclusion, then, is that, as a deed of general assignment for the benefit of creditors is made by the Bankruptcy Act alone sufficient to justify an adjudication in involuntary bankruptcy against the debtor making such deed, without reference to his solvency at the time of the filing of the petition, that the denial of insolvency by way of defense to a petition based upon the making of a general assignment is not warranted by the bankruptcy law." See also Green River Deposit Bank v. Craig Bros. (D. C., Ky.), 6 Am. B. R. 381, 110 Fed. 137; Bray v. Cobb (D. C., N. Car.), 1 Am. B. R. 153, 91 Fed. 102; Canner v. Tapper Co. (C. C. An assignment for the benefit of creditors is itself an act of bankruptcy, without regard to whether actual fraud was intended by the debtor, or whether he is solvent or insolvent. Gill v. Farmers' & Manufacturers' Bank (Mo. [Kan. City] Ct. of App.), 189 Mo. Ct. of App. 401, 35 Am. B. R. 91, 176 S. W. 1111. See Am. B. R. Digest, §§ 157, 184.

Insolvency as element.—The attempt of a debtor through the operation of a general assignment for the benefit of creditors to place his property out of the reach of his creditors, even for the laudable purpose of assuring to them the ultimate payment of their claims, constitutes in itself an act of bankruptcy, irrespective of the question of insolvency. Matter of Utley (D. C., Pa.), 37 Am. B. R. 670, 235 Fed. 905.

A general assignment for the benefit of creditors is an act of bankruptcy to which there can be no possible defense, except a denial of the fact. If it is followed by a petition in bankruptcy the bankruptcy court obtains exclusive jurisdiction entirely irrespective of the question of solvency or insolvency. Matter of Federal Mail & Express Co. (D. his debts, it operates in law as a general assignment for the benefit of creditors.²⁴¹ For instance a confession of judgment by a debtor to a trustee for the benefit of his creditors,²⁴² and any general assignment for the benefit of creditors under a statute regulating this common-law right,²⁴³ have been held to be general assignments within the bankruptcy act. A general assignment for the benefit of creditors may be made by a corporation, by the proper resolution being adopted by directors and stockholders,²⁴⁴ but the act is not consummated so as to constitute an act of bankruptcy, if the proposed plan was never carried into effect.²⁴⁵ An assignment may be invalid as to other

The elements of an insolvency law are insolvency, surrender of property, its administration by a receiver or trustee, distribution of the assets among creditors, and a provision for priorities or other matters not permissible in the absence of such a statute; and a provision for the discharge of the debtor from the unpaid balance of his debts is not essential. In re Weedman Stave Co. (D. A special deposit by a debtor, three days before the institution of bankruptcy proceedings against her, of all her assets with a bank which was one of her creditors, with directions to pay all creditors their pro rata share, constitutes an assignment for the benefit of creditors within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and is void as against the trustee in bankruptcy. Gill v. Farmers' & Manufacturers' Bank (Mo. (Kan. City) Ct. of App.), 189 Mo. Ct. of App. 401, 35 Am. B. R. 91, 176 S. W. 1111.

What constitutes general assignment.—The term "general assignment for the benefit of creditors," as used in section 3a (4) of the Bankruptcy Act, does not concern itself merely with such acts of a debtor as would constitute an assignment for the benefit of creditors under the laws of the State in which it is made or, merely with the form of the written instrument employed to effectuate such purpose; on the contrary, the Act does concern itself with, and does contemplate, all acts of a debtor, regardless of the manner or form of their accomplishment, by which he parts with the title and possession of all his property of every kind and nature for the benefit of his creditors, to be disposed of by any means his trustee or assignee by him selected and named may employ, independent of the Bankruptcy Act. Hence where the effect of an instrument having a defeasance clause and claimed to be mortgage was to pass the legal title to all the property of the bankrupt to trustees named by it, and under which they took actual possession of its property, with full power of disposition and distribution of the proceeds to the creditors, the writing and the entire transaction thereunder constituted a general assignment for the benefit of creditors as contemplated by the Bankruptcy Act, and, hence, was an act of bankruptcy. Matter of Heleker Brothers Co. (D. C., Kan.), 33 Am. B. R. 503 216 Fed. 963.

Omissions of valueless property.—The fact that certain property of no value is omitted from an instrument purporting to be a general assignment does not deprive it of its character as such. Matter of Dashiell (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 40 Am. B. R. 649, 246 Fed. 366.

^{245.} In the case of In re Federal Lumber Co. (D. C., Mass.), 26 Am. B. members of a firm, being executed only by one of them.²⁴⁶ But a voluntary assignment by one partner of all the assets of a firm for the benefit of firm creditors constitutes an act of bankruptcy for which the firm may be adjudged bankrupt, although the other partner did not participate therein.²⁴⁷ An assignment constitutes an act of bankruptcy, although it be not valid for all purposes, for instance, because of a want of the assent of creditors.²⁴⁸ Neither a bill of sale nor a mortgage is usually a general assignment.²⁴⁹

(3) APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER OR TRUSTEE.—(I) In general.—After In re Empire Metallic Bedstead Co.,²⁵⁰ it was long thought to be settled that the voluntary application of an insolvent corporation for a receivership under State laws is not a general assignment, and, therefore, not an act of bankruptcy under § 3-a (4),²⁵¹ though there is now persuasive authority that it is under § 3-a (1). It followed that a suit by one partner against the other for an accounting of their insolvent partnership, resulting in the appointment of a receiver, was not an act of bankruptcy under this subsection.²⁵² Now, a copartnership or a corporation²⁵³ which is insolvent and applies for or, because of insolvency,²⁵⁴ has been put in charge of a receiver or trustee, under the laws of a State, or of a territory, or of the United States, thereby commits an act of bankruptcy. This amendment was intended to place all copartnerships and such corporations as may be adjudged involuntary bankrupts²⁵⁵ on the same footing as individual insolvents who attempt an equivalent fraud on the act.²⁵⁶

256. Some of the reasons for the change have been stated thus:

(1) It is one of the general purposes of the bankruptcy law to provide a uniform national law by which insolvent traders can make a pro rata distribution of their assets among creditors, and there is no reason apparent why trading corporations as well as trading copartnerships should not be permitted to avail themselves of this statute.

(2) In the more important commercial

The amendment of 1903 is not retroactive, and a petition filed after such amendment took effect alleging the appointment of a receiver for an insolvent corporation within the four months' period, but prior to the passage of the amendment, must be dismissed; the fact that the receivership continues after the taking effect of the amendment, is not of itself sufficient to create an act of bankruptcy.²⁵⁷

(II) Exercise of bankruptcy jurisdiction.—The law does not necessarily deprive a State court of jurisdiction conferred upon a State court to dissolve a local corporation, even though the reason for exercising such jurisdiction be the insolvency of such corporation.²⁵⁸ The same rule applies to dissolution proceedings as in the case of a general assignment for the benefit of creditors.²⁵⁹ As in the case of a general assignment, proceedings for the dissolution of a corporation and the appointment of a receiver are voidable only in case bankruptcy proceedings are brought seasonably,²⁶⁰ that is within four months after the appointment of a receiver. In case of failure to act within such period, the jurisdiction of the State court, if rightfully acquired, becomes fixed and not subject to interference.²⁶¹

(III) Application for receivership.—This clause makes the application for a receiver or trustee by a bankrupt who is insolvent an act of bankruptcy; if such an application is relied upon it must be alleged that the application was made by the debtor.²⁶² Mere consent alone is not sufficient.^{262a} The receivership may be on account of a corporation,

States, small corporations, with their limited liability, have practically superseded partnerships. As the law now stands, short of the commission of an act of bankruptcy, these corporations must wind up their affairs under the procedure of the State which created them, a procedure which is everywhere less favorable to creditors.

(3) Owing to the lack of comity between the States, a receiver of an insolvent corporation in one State is rarely recognized in another, with the result that the creditors in that other State, by garnishee process or otherwise, may, unless the corporation commits an act of bankruptcy, secure preferences.

(4) If a corporation seeks to wind up its affairs and distribute its assets by means of a receivership, such a proceeding does not constitute an act of bankruptcy, and, consequently, creditors are entirely deprived of the valuable rights and safeguards provided by the bankruptcy law.

(5) As the law now stands, a corporation which wishes to be administered in bankruptcy is compelled to go through the motions of committing an act of bankruptcy that involuntary bankruptcy may be alleged against it, and it be brought into court apparently against its will. This circumlocution is bad in principle and worse in practice. (Report of Ex. Com. of Nat. Ass'n of Referees in Bankruptcy, of March, 1900.)

R. 223 the court said: "Giving subdivision a (4) the construction which its language demands, we are of the opinion that it does not make a receivership an act of bankruptcy unless it was procured upon the application of the insolvent himself and while insolvent, and does not make the putting a receiver in charge of the property of the insolvent an act of bankruptcy, unless this was done because of insolvency; and if the latter provision applies to any case where the trustee has not been put in charge, pursuant to some statute of the State, or a receiver put in charge by court, acting under statutory authority, it certainly applies only when this has been done because of insolvency."

In the case of Exploration Mercantile Co. v. Pacific, etc., Co. (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 24 Am. B. R. 216, 177 Fed. 825, it was held that an application for a receiver by one of the three stockholders, constituting a corporation, was sufficient as an application for a receiver by the corporation; this ruling was based upon proof that the stockholders had conspired to hinder, delay and defraud creditors by securing the appointment of one of them as a receiver. Matter of Rankin (D. Not only is there nothing in the record to indicate that the managing director of this British corporation lacked authority to direct such action, but the testimony is inferentially to the contrary, and is specifically that he had complete control of the company's affairs. If Donaldson individually lacked full control, there was testimony that Watson & Company represented the stock control and, inferentially at least, had whatever control Donaldson lacked; and it is perhaps of some interest in this connection that the amended bill in the insolvency proceeding by implication treats the members of Watson & Company as Whitaker's principals. We think the record did not impugn the existence of full authority on the part of Donaldson and Watson & Company to direct the receivership, and thus the commission of an act of bankruptcy. Exploration Mercantile Co. v. Pacific, etc., Co. (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 24 Am. B. R. 216, 177 Fed. 825, 839; In re Maplecroft Mills (D. C., S. Car.), 33 Am. B. R. 815, 218 Fed. 659, 673. Moreover, if those placed in full charge of the company's affairs were thus clothed in fact with sufficient power to actually accomplish a legally effective receivership, we cannot think the application therefor was any the less an act of bankruptcy because those responsible therefor had no right, as against the stockholders, to so act. A somewhat contrary holding was had in Matter of Butler Co. (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 30 Am. B. R. 502, 207 Fed. 705, 713. How far that decision may have been affected by the law under which the corporation was organized does not appear."

Application by officers.—Where the persons who filed a petition in a State court for the appointment of receivers for a corporation were officers and the majority stockholders of the corporation, and the stockholders never objected to the proceedings, and the answer to a petition in bankruptcy subsequently filed against the corporation was verified by the same person who verified the petition in the State court, the filing of the petition for the appointment of receivers will be deemed to have been the act of the corporation. Doyle-Kidd Dry Goods Co. v. Sadler-Lusk Trading Co. (D. C., Ark.), 30 Am. B. R. 604, 206 Fed. 813. As to acts of agents and officers of corporation, see Butler & Co. v. Palmenberg (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 30 Am. B. R. 502, 207 Fed. 705.

Application by stockholders.—An application for a receiver, made by stockholders of a corporation all of whom are creditors, pursuant to the statute of Rhode Island, is not an application by the corporation so as to constitute an act of bankruptcy. Hansen v. Uniform Seamless Wire Co. (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 39 Am. B. R. 627, 243 Fed. 177.

Application for appointment of receiver.—It is only when a receiver of a corporation has been appointed in another court because of insolvency, as that term is defined in the Bankruptcy Act, or where the corporation on its own initiative has applied for the appointment of a receiver or custodian of its property, that an act of bankruptcy under § 3-a (4), has been committed. In re Edward Ellsworth Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 23 Am. B. R. 284, 173 Fed. 699; Matter of Rankin (D. C., Ohio), 32 Am. B. R. 45, 210 Fed. 529, (quoting the text).

Corporation permitting appointment of receiver.—An involuntary petition against a corporation, filed by an individual stockholder thereof, alleging that it had permitted a receiver of its property to be appointed by a State court because of insolvency, may be deemed sufficient if sustained, although the Bankruptcy Act describes no such act of bankruptcy. Its language is the appointment of a receiver under the laws of a State "because of insolvency." It appeared that the proceeding in the State court was by an officer and stockholder of the corporation and may not insist subsequently that the receivership was an act of bankruptcy for the purpose of transferring the administration of the corporate property to the bankruptcy court.²⁶⁶ Where the application for the appointment of the receiver in the State court was made on the ground of insolvency, the fact that the State court may have been without jurisdiction or that the appointment was improvidently made, does not deprive the appointment from being an act of bankruptcy.^{266a}

(IV) What constitutes appointment.—An agreement to wind up the affairs of a corporation and make an assignment of all its property to its directors as trustees to close up its business is an act of bankruptcy.²⁶⁷ It is not essential to constitute an act of bankruptcy under this clause of the section, that the appointment of a receiver was made by a State court under a State statute. The fact that a receiver has been put in charge of the debtor's property by a State court acting under its general equity power will be sufficient to constitute the appointment of a receiver "under the laws of the State," within the meaning of this clause.²⁶⁸ The appointment of a receiver of an insolvent corporation by a State court, by consent of the parties, under a statute providing therefor, is an act of bankruptcy.²⁶⁹ Since the passage of the amendment a State court cannot, by appointing a receiver of an insolvent debtor, obtain priority of jurisdiction to administer the assets of such debtor.²⁷⁰ It is immaterial however, that a proceeding for the dissolution of a corporation was instituted prior to the taking effect of the amendment, if the application for an order appointing a permanent receiver in such proceedings was made subsequent to such amendment.²⁷¹ The application by an administrator of a deceased partner for a receiver to wind up the affairs of an insolvent firm, in which the surviving partner joined, is not an act of bankruptcy.²⁷² The appointment of a special commissioner in a decree of the State court does not constitute an act of bankruptcy, where such commissioner is in effect only a substitute for the sheriff.^{272a}

(4) INSOLVENCY ESSENTIAL.—(I) Insolvency as sole ground.—The application for the appointment of a receiver or trustee, in order to constitute an act of bankruptcy under this subsection, must be based upon insolvency. If insolvency was one of the substantial reasons for the appointment of a receiver or trustee the case would come within the construction of the statute.²⁷³ Where a statute under which proceedings are taken against an insolvent corporation, authorizes the appointment of a receiver thereof, only after a judicial determination of the insolvency of the corporation, the appointment of a temporary receiver upon the ex parte application of a stockholder to restrain the corporation from exercising any of its franchises or privileges, is not an act of bankruptcy.²⁷⁴ An appointment of a receiver pendente lite to take possession no answer was filed. The proof was held insufficient to establish that the receivership was because of insolvency. Matter of Valentine Bohl Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 34 Am. B. R. 856, 224 Fed. 686.

of the company's property, in order to prevent mismanagement of its affairs by the majority of its directors, is not an appointment upon the grounds of insolvency and does not constitute an act of bankruptcy.²⁷⁶ If in such a case a permanent receiver be appointed, the receivership is "because of insolvency" of the corporation, and constitutes an act of bankruptcy.²⁷⁸

(II) Actual insolvency.—The rule is that the receivership must have been procured because of the actual insolvency of the debtor.²⁷⁷ If the application is made under a State statute on account of a fear that insolvency will ensue, it does not constitute an act of bankruptcy, since the statute requires the existence of actual insolvency as a cause for the application.²⁷⁹ But it has been held that if the receivership was obtained on the ground of insolvency, it is not material that the corporation was not in fact insolvent; the adjudication of insolvency by the State court will give rise to a presumption that the receivership was based on the grounds of insolvency.²⁷⁹

(III) Allegations as to other grounds where insolvency existed.—It must appear upon the face of the complaint in the State court that the corporation was insolvent when it was filed; the fact that the corporation deemed it necessary to apply for a receiver to secure temporary relief will not be used to its prejudice in a court of bankruptcy, unless insolvency is alleged at such time.²⁸⁰ Petitioning creditors, relying on this act of bankruptcy, must allege and prove insolvency when the application for a receiver or trustee was made, and if the receivership or trusteeship was secured upon the application of any other person, it must be shown that such receivership or trusteeship was obtained because of insolvency.²⁸¹ There is some confusion as to this question.

280. Appointment of receiver of corporation by State court.—The fact that a corporation deemed it necessary to apply to the State court for the appointment of a receiver in order to enable it to secure temporary relief should not be used to its prejudice in a court of bankruptcy, unless it clearly appears upon the face of the complaint filed in the State court that the corporation was insolvent within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act at the date of the filing of the same. Maplecroft Mills v. Childs et al. (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 35 Am. B. R. 311, 226 Fed. 415.

281. In re Edward Ellsworth Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 23 Am. B. R. 284, 173 Fed. 699, in which the court said: "The bankruptcy act has not superseded the right and power of a court of equity to take charge of the property of an insolvent corporation for

The district court in the Maplecroft Mills case argued ably that if the real cause of the receivership was the insolvency of the corporation at the time the application for a receiver was made, the allegation of other grounds in such application ought not to control the character of the act.²⁸² And it has been held that if the receivership was at the instance of an insolvent corporation, it is immaterial that the receivership was ordered for a cause other than insolvency, it appearing that the corporation was actually insolvent at the time the application was made.²⁸³ But if it appear upon an application made for a receivership under State laws authorizing such receivership upon the invitation of outside parties, it must appear that insolvency was the cause of the application; if it appear in such a case, from the pleading and the evidence adduced, that the appointment is made for some other cause than the insolvency of the debtor, it is not an act of bankruptcy under this subsection, although it may appear that the debtor was in fact insolvent when the receiver was appointed.²⁸⁴

the protection of stockholders and creditors, marshal the same, recognize and enforce valid liens and priorities and equitably distribute the surplus proceeds among its creditors. It is only where a receiver has been appointed in another court because of insolvency, as that term is defined in the bankruptcy law, or where the corporation on its own initiative has applied for the appointment of a receiver or custodian of its property, that an act of bankruptcy under § 3-a (4) has been committed."

Evidence of insolvency.—The appointment of a receiver of a corporation by the State court of Washington "for the reason that said corporation is utterly insolvent and unable to meet or pay its obligations," in the absence of testimony, is not conclusive of the insolvency of the corporation, within the meaning of section 1 (15) of the Bankruptcy Act. Unpaid stock subscriptions of a corporation are assets which must be considered in determining whether or not the corporation is insolvent, within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act. Matter of Commonwealth Lumber Co. (D. C., Wash.), 35 Am. B. R. 202, 226 Fed. 415.

283. Where real ground of appointment is insolvency.—If the effect of the action of the State court in the taking possession of the assets of the corporation be in result to subtract from the operation of the Bankruptcy Act that which would be subject to it, the so wording of the order that the State court's action may be placed on another ground would not be effective to prevent the operation of the Bankruptcy Act. In other words, where the real and substantial result of the State court's order was that a receiver was appointed because of the insolvency of the corporation, and the effect of the proceedings in the State court should logically be to wind up and liquidate the assets of the corporation and distribute them as the assets of an insolvent corporation the operation of the Bankruptcy Act cannot be defeated because in the proceedings or pleadings or orders or decrees of the State court its action may be based upon no ground at all, or upon any other ground than insolvency. To hold otherwise would be to allow, in any case where for the purpose of effecting such results pretensive grounds were alleged for appealing to the State court, the whole distribution and liquidation of the assets of an insolvent and bankrupt corporation to be taken away, and creditors to be deprived of that which by paramount statute is intended for their benefit under a general and uniform system of administration of insolvent corporations. Matter of Maplecroft Mills (D. R. 284, 173 Fed. 699, citing this work, and holding that the court is precluded from considering evidence alunde to contradict the decree or judgment of another court appointing receivers and setting forth the basis of such appointment.

Imminent danger of insolvency, as alleged in a bill by a stockholder for the appointment of a receiver, and the subsequent appointment based thereon, is insufficient. In re Perry Aldrich Co. (D. C., Mass.), 21 Am. B. R. 244, 165 Fed. 249.

Winding up affairs of partnership.—In the case of Moss National Bank v. Arend (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 16 Am. B. R. 867, 146 Fed. 351, an application was made for the appointment of a receiver by the administrator of a deceased partner under the provisions of the Ohio statute. The court said: "It is conceded that this was not a case where, 'because of insolvency a receiver has

(IV) Proof of insolvency.—The burden is upon the petitioning creditors to show insolvency.²³⁵ The record of the court appointing the receiver may be used to prove the fact that the receivership was obtained because of the insolvency of the debtor, and if the grounds are stated in the record extrinsic evidence is not admissible to vary the terms thereof.²³⁶ It is not sufficient to show that the receiver was appointed under a State statute which authorized a receivership where the directors assert that the corporation is unable to meet its obligations as they mature; this on the assumption that the corporation been put in charge of property,' because clearly the receiver was not appointed because of insolvency, but because of the death of a partner and to wind up the partnership. But it is submitted that, since the firm and the surviving partner were insolvent, and the latter joined in the application, he 'being insolvent, applied for a receiver or trustee for his property' and therefore committed an act of bankruptcy. But, as held by the court below, the surviving partner never really applied for a receiver. He had no power under the Ohio statute to apply for a receiver. He had the option of taking the interest of the deceased partner at an appraisal. He had thirty days in which to exercise this option. He did not want the interest at the appraisal, so he waived the thirty days and immediately declared his intention of not exercising the option. When he had done this, he had exhausted the power conferred upon him by the statute. It then became the positive duty of the administrator to apply for the appointment of a receiver to wind up the business. This duty was discharged and the receiver was appointed on the application of the administrator and for the purpose of winding up the partnership."

Under these circumstances it was held that the surviving partner did not commit an act of bankruptcy by joining in the application for the appointment of a receiver.

236. Record of proceedings in State court.—Where the State court makes an express finding as to insolvency the petitioning creditors in a bankruptcy proceeding against the corporation are not required to prove otherwise than by record in the State court that the corporation was insolvent and that because of insolvency a receiver was put in charge of the bankrupt's by the State court. Greenwood Gum Co. v. Zimmerman (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 39 Am. B. R. 198, 240 Fed. 637. In the case of Blue Mountain Iron & Supply Co. v. Portner (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 12 Am. B. R. 559, 131 Fed. 57, the court said: "The essential element in the alleged act of bankruptcy is insolvency. As stated the petitioning creditors have alleged and the jury found by the verdict that the defendant corporation was insolvent on the day the receivers were appointed and on the day the petition in bankruptcy was filed. The jury found as a fact, that it was 'because of insolvency' the receivers were put in charge of the company's property." And as stated in another place in its opinion: "At all events the issue was made and submitted in the bankrupt court and the best evidence of the appointment of the receivers was the record of the proceedings in equity in the court which made the appointment. It was the basis of the issue, and could have been proved in no other way. The record was obtained for this purpose, and no authority is cited holding that the best evidence of a proceeding in a court of equity is not the record of the proceeding. The record of the proceeding in court was the best evidence and there was no error in admitting it." See also In re Spalding (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 14 Am. B. R. 129, 139 Fed. 244, in which case it was held that the court could base its determination as to the commission of an act of bankruptcy by the debtor upon the record of the court appointing a receiver and the order of appointment which recited the grounds for the appointment as being a threatened disposition of the debtor's property in fraud of creditors.

In Matter of Maplecroft Mills (D. C., S. Car.), 33 Am. B. R. 815, 218 Fed. 659 (reversed on other grounds, 35 Am. B. R. 311, 226 Fed. 415), the court said: "It will be seen by the language of the Bankruptcy Act that under this last clause insolvency itself is not made one of the substantial issues to be tried as an issue of fact in the bankrupt court except in so far as the appointment of a receiver or trustee has been because of insolvency. In other words, if the action of the court appointing a receiver was based upon insolvency, that is the only question for determination, and in itself would appear to determine the question of insolvency as adjudicated in the order making the appointment. It is not necessary under this subdivision that, in addition to evidence showing the appointment of a receiver by the court appointing the receiver because of insolvency, evidence should be additionally produced outside of the action of the court to show that the alleged bankrupt was in fact insolvent. In other words, it is not necessary, upon an application for involuntary bankruptcy under this last clause, to prove both that the alleged bankrupt had had a receiver appointed because of insolvency, and in addition and wholly dehors of this order of appointment the alleged bankrupt was actually insolvent, but to establish only that the receiver was appointed by the court appointing him because of insolvency, which involves and establishes the existence of insolvency. This question is to be determined principally by the inspection of the record of the court appointing the receiver."

might be solvent though temporarily unable to meet maturing obligations.²⁸⁷ If the records and findings of the court below show that a receiver of a corporation was appointed because of insolvency it is sufficient although the statutes under which the proceeding for the appointment of a receiver was instituted did not provide that insolvency was the cause of the receivership.²⁸⁸ It has been held, however, that where a petition is filed against a corporation because of the appointment of a receiver in a State court, it is entitled to a hearing on the question of insolvency and is not concluded by the finding of the State court on that issue.²⁸⁹

(5) MEANING OF WORDS.—“Insolvent” has the same meaning here as elsewhere in the statute.²⁹⁰ The amendment thus makes insolvency an essential element of proof in receivership cases.²⁹¹ The insolvency referred to is that which falls within the definition of the term as used in the act; it will not suffice to allege insolvency in the terms of a State statute, as for instance, in the sense of the inability of the alleged bankrupt to meet its current obligations.²⁹² “Applied for” manifestly means the voluntary application of the copartnership or of a corporation under resolution of its board of directors or other governing body, as regulated or prescribed by the State law of which the corporation is the creature.²⁹³ “Been put in charge of” clearly indicates every other means of securing the appointment of a receiver, as when the

R. 676, 199 Fed. 358, which arose under a Louisiana statute authorizing a receivership for certain enumerated causes, one of which is when the board of directors have declared by resolution that the corporation is unable to meet its obligations as they mature, but the statute does not provide for the appointment of a receiver at the instance of a creditor on the grounds of insolvency, unless he has a final and executory judgment. It was held, that conceding that the State court had jurisdiction to appoint a receiver on the ground of insolvency, in the proceedings then before it, it could not be presumed that the receivers were appointed because of insolvency, since the corporation might have been solvent, although unable to meet its debts as they matured.

The record certainly does not show conclusively that insolvency was not the cause or one of the causes which led to the appointment. It may be said to exhibit a prima facie showing of insolvency of sufficient force to put the respondent corporation in this court upon its proofs. If such ruling be adopted no harm can come to any one hereafter. If applications shall be made to the state courts for receivers in cases where, beyond question, the corporation is solvent, the record in the state court will undoubtedly proclaim the fact in a convincing way.”

292. Insolvency as defined under State statute.—A receivership is not an act of bankruptcy, unless created “because of insolvency,” as insolvency is defined by the Bankruptcy Act. A complaint in a suit in a State court for the appointment of a receiver of a corporation, alleging that the defendant is without money or credit, and “is now and for a considerable time last past has been wholly insolvent and unable to pay its just debts and obligations as they mature and fall due in the regular course of business,” and an order finding all the allegations to be true and appointing a receiver, are insufficient to establish that the receiver was appointed because of insolvency, within the meaning of section 3a (4) of the Bankruptcy Act. Matter of Butte Duluth Mining Co. (D. State or a creditor proceeds against the corporation for its dissolution.²⁹⁴ "Trustee," of course, means much the same as "receiver;" the nomenclature being different in different States. The intention of the amendment of 1903 being clear, there would appear little doubt that any act, procedure, or process for the winding up of insolvent corporations or copartnerships, which substantially abridges or deprives creditors of the right to a trustee of their own choosing, or of the greater right to compel prorating between all creditors of the same class, or any other right given them by the bankruptcy law, will, provided the alleged bankrupt is insolvent at the time of the commission of the act complained of and that act be within the four months' period, amount to an act of bankruptcy. The importance of this change cannot be overestimated.²⁹⁵

(6) PRECEDENTS UNDER FORMER LAW.—The law of 1867 applied to "all moneyed, business, or commercial corporations and joint-stock companies." This section also provided that "upon the petition of any creditor of such corporation or company, the like proceedings shall be had and taken as are provided in the case of debtors." But the corresponding acts of bankruptcy under the former law,²⁹⁶ are not sufficiently analogous to furnish reliable precedents; in each the element of intent was essential. A voluntary receivership of a corporation may, of course, amount to "a transfer of his (its) creditors;" so may it also be "a transfer of money or other property," or "the procuring of its property to be taken on legal process," each with intent to prefer; or "with the intent by such disposition of his (its) property to defeat or delay the operation of the act." But now, not even the result, much less the intent, is the essential test. The mere fact of the appointment of a receiver or trustee, nay, even a mere application for such an appointment coupled with insolvency, is enough. However, it was held under the law of 1867, that the appointment by a State court of a receiver of a corporation is "a taking on legal process;"²⁹⁷ and the fact that the corporation was extinct, it having been dissolved by the State law, was held not a bar to the proceeding in bankruptcy, or to oust the Federal court of jurisdiction.²⁹⁸

e. Fifth act of bankruptcy; a confession of bankruptcy.—(1) IN GENERAL.—A person commits an act of bankruptcy by having "admitted in writing his inability to pay his debts and his willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt on that ground." The importance of this act of bankruptcy rests mainly upon its application to a corporation. It is not to be expected that in his correspondence a debtor who is a natural person will, for the purpose of getting into bankruptcy, both confess inability to pay his debts and willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt; the filing of a voluntary petition is more direct. But many corporations are restricted under the act from becoming voluntary bankrupts except as they confess their inability to pay their debts and their willingness to be adjudged bankrupt under this statute, in which event involuntary proceedings may be instituted against them. Indeed the value of this act of bankruptcy did not appear until the determination that corporations might through it become in effect voluntary bankrupts was generally recognized.³⁰⁰ The amendment of § 4 by the amendatory act of 1910, permitting any business or mercantile corporation except a municipal, railroad, insurance or banking corporation to become a bankrupt has materially lessened the force and effect of this clause of the section.³⁰¹ The filing of a voluntary petition is itself treated as an act of bankruptcy.³⁰²

(2) ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS.—(I) In general.—Three things seem to be necessary to constitute this act: (1) a writing signed by the debtor or some officer or agent duly authorized; (2) a distinct admission therein of his inability to pay his debts; and (3) an unqualified expression of willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt on that ground.^{302a} Thus, where the officer of a corporation was deputized to execute such a writing, provided a petition should be filed against it, it is not an act of bankruptcy.³⁰³ If the writing is sufficient, the fact that the debtor requested certain creditors to file a petition against him does not affect the character of the act.³⁰⁴ When this act of bankruptcy is alleged, the question of insolvency is immaterial,³⁰⁵ but, nevertheless, a contesting creditor has the right to raise the issue as to whether or not the alleged bankrupt made such an admission and to stay the attempted adjudication until the petitioners fairly bear the burden of proving that he made the admission.^{305a}

R. 1, 10, 46 L. Ed. 1113, the court said: "The schedules must be verified and the petition must state that 'bankrupt owes debts which he is unable to pay in full,' and 'that he is willing to surrender all his property for the benefit of his creditors, except such as is exempt by law.' This establishes these facts, so far as the degree of bankruptcy is concerned, and he has committed an act of bankruptcy in filing the petition."

Unqualified admission of insolvency.—A resolution of the board of directors of a corporation by which an attorney was authorized to represent it generally in any suit or suits or bankruptcy proceedings then pending or that might be brought, and to agree on behalf of the corporation to the appointment of a receiver, is not the unqualified written admission by the corporation of its inability to pay its debts and its willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt on that ground, required to constitute an act of bankruptcy within the meaning of the statute. In re Southern Steel Co. (D. In Massachusetts.—In the case of In re Bates Machine Co. (D. C., Mass.), 1 Am. B. R. 129, 91 Fed. 624, which arose under the Massachusetts statute, it was held that, where by the laws of the State under which the corporation is formed, the powers of its officers and directors are defined and limited, a written admission by the directors of the corporation, which is in excess of their authority, is not sufficient to base an involuntary petition in bankruptcy against the bankrupt.

Under the law of Arizona, which does not prohibit such action, the board of directors of a corporation may, without the consent of the stockholders, make an admission that the corporation is unable to pay its debts, and declare its willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt on that ground. Home Power Co. v. Gels (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 29 Am. B. R. 580, 204 Fed. 568.

Admission by board of directors of Michigan corporation.—Since the board of directors of a Michigan corporation may make or authorize the making of a common-law assignment they may commit an act of bankruptcy, binding on the corporation, by admitting in writing the inability of the corporation to pay its debts and its willingness to be adjudicated a bankrupt on that ground. Matter of Russell Wheel & Foundry Co. (D. C., Mich.), 35 Am. B. R. 66, 223 Fed. 569.

A Maine corporation has no power to commit the fifth act of bankruptcy except by a vote of its stockholders, and such act can be authorized only by such vote at a meeting duly called for that purpose. Matter of Standard Shipyard Co. (D. C., Me.), 45 Am. B. R. 67, 262 Fed. 522.

^{308.} Statute preventing transfer.—Authority given by the board of directors of a corporation, one of whom owned nearly all the capital stock, for the making of a voluntary petition in bankruptcy, is sufficient, notwithstanding a State statute prohibiting any sale, assignment, or transfer of the franchise and property of a corporation without the consent of the stockholders holding at least two-thirds of the capital stock. Bell v. Blessing (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 35 Am. B. R. 673, 225 Fed. 750.

ment.³⁰⁹ If a board is enjoined from commencing or prosecuting any proceeding "involving in any way the property or property rights" of the corporation, the adoption of a resolution confessing the inability of the corporation to pay its debts, and signifying its willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt is unauthorized and does not constitute an act of bankruptcy.³¹⁰ While a writing in the exact words of the statute, if authoritatively signed,³¹¹ is surely sufficient; yet it would seem that any writing³¹² which substantially covers the three essentials just stated will be enough.³¹³

(III) Officers of corporation.—The treasurer of a corporation cannot admit inability to pay debts and signify the willingness of the corporation to be adjudged a bankrupt;³¹⁴ unless, of course, he is authorized to do so by a resolution passed at a meeting of the stockholders, or of the directors; in such a case the right is not affected by the appointment of a receiver in a State court.³¹⁵

(IV) Admission by partners.—A written admission of one member of a firm, purporting to be made on behalf of himself and the other members to the effect that they are unable to pay their debts and are willing to be adjudicated bankrupts, is binding upon the firm,³¹⁶ unless repudiated by the partners when opportunity is offered.^{316a}

III. WHEN AND AGAINST WHOM PETITION MAY BE FILED.

a. Against person who is insolvent and has committed act of bankruptcy.—

Subsection b of this section authorizes the filing of a petition against a person who is insolvent and who has committed an act of bankruptcy within four months after the commission of such act. The word "person" as here used includes a corporation,³¹⁷ officers, partnerships, and women,³¹⁸ but does not include wage-earners or a person engaged chiefly in farming or the tillage of the soil.³¹⁹ An act of bankruptcy may be committed by an officer or agent of a corporation or by a member of a partnership, while acting in behalf of the corporation or partnership and within the scope of his authority.³²⁰ If the

A resolution of the board of directors of a corporation, authorizing the cashier, treasurer, and bookkeeper to prosecute in the name of the corporation a petition in bankruptcy to final discharge, is sufficient to authorize a voluntary proceeding, and it is unnecessary that the resolution authorize, in strict conformity with section 3a (5) of the bankruptcy act, an admission in writing on the part of the corporation of its inability to pay its debts, and its willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt on that ground. Bell v. Blessing (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 35 Am. B. R. 672, 225 Fed. 750.

act complained of is that of one partner acting individually the partnership cannot be charged with the effect thereof.³²¹ "Insolvent," means what it always does in this statute. Here, also, it means something more, i. e., insolvency at the time of the filing of the petition, and, if the act of bankruptcy is one which can be committed only by an insolvent, at the time of the commission of such act. In most cases, insolvency at both times must, therefore, be distinctly alleged.³²²

b. Time within which petition must be filed.—(1) WITHIN FOUR MONTHS AFTER THE COMMISSION OF THE ACT.—The petition must be filed within four months after the commission of the act of bankruptcy.^{323a} In making the computation the day of filing is excluded and the last day included.³²³ If the last day is a Sunday or a "holiday,"³²⁴ the time does not expire until the next day;³²⁵ and days will not be split into hours.³²⁶ The meaning of "within four months," when applied to transactions other than acts of bankruptcy, is further considered in the discussion under §§ 60, 67 and 70.

(2) NECESSITY FOR RECORD OR POSSESSION TO START TIME RUNNING.—A fair statement of its meaning is: a petition cannot be filed more than four months after the recording of the instrument constituting the alleged act of bankruptcy where recording is required or permitted,^{326a} or, where it is not, more than the same statutory period after the beneficiary takes notorious, exclusive, and continuous possession of the property transferred; provided always that prior actual notice shall set the time running in either case.³²⁷ The last four lines, i. e., after the word "required," of the subsection do not recur in the like sentence added to § 60-b by the amendatory act of 1903,³²⁸ doubtless the common rule as to actual notice should be read into it. Their purpose here is clear. Further they seem to make necessary the substitution of "and" for "or" in the phrase "notorious, exclusive, or continuous,"³²⁹ for, if with notice, every possession must be "notorious," and if that alone, and not also a possession that is "exclusive and continuous," were enough to start the time running, the clause as to actual notice would become tautological. If the act of bankruptcy consists of a fraudulent or preferential transfer, the time will begin to run ordinarily from the day when the "beneficiary takes notorious, exclusive or continuous possession of the property, unless the petitioning creditors have received actual notice of such transfer or assignment." If the transfer or assignment must be recorded or registered to be effectual the time begins to run from the day of the recording or registering. This is the evident purpose of the act. It will sometimes be difficult to determine what constitutes "notorious, exclusive or continuous possession" of the property. If such possession pertains to intangible forms of personal property it must be construed to mean such possession as the property is susceptible of and such as is usual and ordinary, unaccompanied by acts or conduct tending to conceal its ownership.³³⁰ Where the requisite notoriety of the transferee's possession is shown, it must appear that the petition has been filed within four months of such possession, actual knowledge on the part of the petitioning creditors being unnecessary.³³¹ Possession is not required in every case to be actual; it may be constructive, as where goods were stored in a warehouse or where in the custody of a transportation company, in which cases the delivery of a warehouse receipt or bill of lading would indicate the change in the possession of the property.³³² Where a verbal pledge, followed by manual delivery of the property, is subsequently confirmed by a written instrument, the four months' period begins to run from the date of the verbal pledge, and if the property was transferred more than four months before the petition was filed, such pledge does not constitute an act of bankruptcy.³³³ Where the transaction consists of deeds of real property which

To be "notorious" the possession need not be advertised to the public. All that the statute requires is that there shall be no attempt at concealment of the possession, no effort to prevent its becoming known. In re Woodward (D. C., Tex.), 2 Am. B. R. 233, 95 Fed. 260.

332. In re Bird (D. C., Minn.), 24 Am. B. R. 24, 180 Fed. 229, in which case it was held that the assignment of an equity in personal property which had been pledged to a bank to secure the payment of a debt, with notice to the bank, operated as a constructive delivery and possession of the property pledged within the meaning of § 3-b.

Change in possession.—In the case of Ozark Cooperage and Lumber Co. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 24 Am. B. R. 835, 180 Fed. 105, it appeared that a written contract had been made between the bankrupt and a certain lumber company, whereby the company was to purchase lumber at a stipulated price, which was to be sawed and piled at the mills of the bankrupt and as so piled was to be estimated and branded with the petitioner's initials; it was held that such acts constituted a delivery of the possession of the lumber. The court said: "Some kinds of personal property may be readily delivered from hand to hand, and interested persons may rightfully expect that method to be observed. In other cases the character of the property and the circumstances of its situation preclude such a delivery; and other indicia or a change of ownership, such as signs, brands and marks, are generally accepted as sufficient. Each case, however, as it arises, should be determined by its own peculiar facts and circumstances. The contract here contemplated that the newly made lumber should remain for a time at "mills, stacked in a particular way for curing and seasoning before shipment. That was perhaps necessary, at any rate it was entirely proper and it cannot be said that while so situated it was not lawfully the subject of barter and sale."

Constructive knowledge of transfer.—Under section 3-b of the bankruptcy act, providing that the petitioning creditor in involuntary proceedings must file his petition within four months after the beneficiary takes notorious, exclusive, or continuous possession of the property transferred, unless he has received actual knowledge of the transfer before then, where the requisite notoriety of the transferee's possession is shown, in order to sustain an involuntary proceeding, it must appear that the petition has been filed within four months of such possession, actual knowledge on the part of the petitioning creditor being unnecessary. Jones v. Coates, (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 28 Am. B. R. 249, 196 Fed. 860.

under the State statute are either required or permitted to be recorded, the date of the transfer as an act of bankruptcy will be the date of recording the deeds.³³⁴ The interpretation placed upon the language of § 60-a, should also be applied to similar language used in § 3-b; so that if the recording of a deed or other instrument is required for any purpose whatever, it must be admitted to be required within the meaning of both of these sections.³³⁵ The second sentence of this subsection relates to the time when the four months' period will begin to run. It has as yet had comparatively little attention from the courts. The manifest purpose of the subsection is to prevent the escape of alleged bankrupts who have committed or concealed acts of bankruptcy more than four months old.³³⁶

IV. SOLVENCY AS A DEFENSE.

a. When insolvency need not be shown.—As has already been indicated, if a debtor makes a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors,³³⁷ or if he admits in writing his inability to pay his debts and his willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt,³³⁸ the question of insolvency is immaterial. If the act of bankruptcy consists of a transfer with intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors, the petitioner need not prove insolvency of the debtor,³³⁹ but the debtor himself may allege his solvency as a defense. We have already considered the necessity of proving solvency in a case where a receiver or trustee has been appointed to take charge of the debtor's property.³⁴⁰ Subsections c and d of § 3 do not apply to this act of bankruptcy. The burden of proving the insolvency of the debtor would, therefore, seem to remain where it usually is, upon the creditor who asserts the insolvency. The reason for this is, perhaps, because the existence of a receivership usually implies insolvency, or perhaps because the papers on which it is granted were thought equivalent of the books and examination called for by § 3-d. In any event to establish this act of bankruptcy it must appear that the receiver or trustee was appointed "because of insolvency." The fact of insolvency will usually appear from the record of the proceedings in which the appointment was made. It would seem necessary for petitioning creditors relying on this act of bankruptcy to allege and prove insolvency, both at the time of the filing and of the commission of the act relied on.³⁴¹ It is not necessary in this place to discuss generally what constitutes insolvency. We have already considered it under § 1 (15) where the term is defined and we will hereafter consider it under § 60 under the subject of "preferences." The rules relating to the proof of the fact of insolvency are similar in all cases.

b. Solvency and the first act of bankruptcy.—It is conceivable that a debtor may have been insolvent at the time of the act of bankruptcy, but not when

R. 311, 189 Fed. 138, holding that where a State statute provides that deeds, not recorded, although good as between the parties, are void as to bona fide purchasers for value without knowledge, the recording of a deed is "required" within the meaning of § 3-b.

the petition is filed. Insolvency, other than as evidence of intent, being unimportant where the act of bankruptcy consists of hindering, delaying, or defrauding creditors, it was both proper and scientific to insert this subsection.³⁴² It seems, therefore, that, where this act of bankruptcy is relied on, it is not necessary that the petitioning creditors either allege or prove insolvency at either period.³⁴³ Where the act of bankruptcy consists of a transfer with intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors the debtor may allege and prove that he was not insolvent at the time of filing the petition against him. If his insolvency at such date is proved by the alleged bankrupt the proceedings are to be dismissed. Where solvency is alleged as a defense in such a case the burden of proving solvency is on the alleged bankrupt.^{343a} On the other hand, it is clear that proof of solvency of the debtor at the time the petition is filed is a complete defense.³⁴⁴ If a solvent person disposes of any of his property with the intent to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors, he commits an act of bankruptcy; and if within the ensuing four months he becomes insolvent, a petition may be filed against him and he may be adjudicated a bankrupt, unless it appears upon proof adduced by the debtor that he was solvent at the time the petition was filed.³⁴⁵ Solvency may be pleaded by a responding creditor as well as by the alleged bankrupt.³⁴⁶ If solvency is relied on by a creditor who opposes the bankruptcy of the debtor, the burden is upon the creditor.³⁴⁷

c. Solvency and the second and third acts of bankruptcy.—(1) PROOF OF INSOLVENCY.—Section 3-d has reference to the second and third acts of bankruptcy only. Both of these acts are constructive or legal fraud, but insolvency is an essential element and must be proved before adjudication. The burden of proving insolvency would, therefore, seem to be upon the petitioning creditors.³⁴⁸ Insolvency in both of these cases must be shown to have existed when the acts were committed; solvency or insolvency at the cealed or removed his property." In the case of In re Hughes (D. C., N. Y.), 25 Am. B. R. 556, 183 Fed. 872, it was held that a conveyance made with intent to hinder and delay creditors, although no fraudulent intention was shown or suspected, was prima facie a fraudulent transfer constituting an act of bankruptcy, under the first clause of the section, and that the alleged bankrupt must submit to bankruptcy in the absence of proof that he was solvent when the petition was filed.

time of the filing of the petition can only have a reflex importance, if any.³⁴⁹ In shady failures, it results in the alleged bankrupt being silent on the question of insolvency, thus eliminating it from the case at the outset. When the bankrupt does put solvency at issue and appears and gives testimony, the burden shifts again to the petitioning creditors.³⁵⁰

(2) PRODUCTION OF BOOKS, PAPERS AND ACCOUNTS.—Under this subsection the alleged bankrupt must appear with his books, papers and accounts and submit to an examination as to all matters tending to establish solvency or insolvency; if he fails so to do the burden is on him.³⁵¹ It is no excuse that a debtor engaged in business kept no books, or that he has lost them; if he does not keep them and know where they are, the burden will rest on him to show that he is solvent.³⁵² The statute does not require that the failure to produce books and papers be wilful or contumacious, in order to throw upon the bankrupt the burden of proving his solvency; the failure to produce, and the absence of a satisfactory explanation is sufficient.³⁵³ The books, papers, and accounts referred to are those material in determining an alleged bankrupt's financial condition.³⁵⁴ The books of the alleged bankrupt are competent, but not conclusive evidence on the question of insolvency.³⁵⁵ The earlier cases where the meaning of this subsection has been in question are cited in the note.³⁵⁶

Protter (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 12 Am. B. R. 288, 129 Fed. 533, it was held that under § 3-d, a merchant is required to produce such books, invoices, etc., as should properly be kept in his business and which are necessary to show the amount of his assets and liabilities, and that his failure to do so, without satisfactory explanation, casts upon him the burden of proving his solvency. In the case of Cummins Grocery Co. v. Talley (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 26 Am. B. R. 484, 187 Fed. 507, the court said: "The evidence in this case does not indicate that there was any intentional refusal on the part of the respondent to produce the papers and accounts relating to the item in question, nor that his failure to do so was contumacious. But the statute does not require that failure be wilful or contumacious, in order to throw upon the bankrupt the burden, which is not a drastic one, of proving his solvency. The failure to make such production must be satisfactorily explained; under the facts stated, the failure was not satisfactorily explained, and it follows that the burden of proof of solvency was, by the statute, thrown upon the alleged bankrupt." The burden is not shifted to the petitioning creditors merely by reason of the fact that the books, etc., are in the possession of the marshal under an order to seize and hold. In re Deeba & Willfong (D. V. BOND ON TAKING POSSESSION OF BANKRUPT'S PROPERTY BEFORE ADJUDICATION.

a. Requirement as to bond.—Section 3-e requires a petitioner or applicant to give bond where it is sought to take charge of and hold property of the alleged bankrupt prior to the adjudication and pending a hearing on the petition. This requirement fits into remedies either granted by or implied from § 2.³⁵⁷ It differs from § 69-a, in that there the authority to issue the warrant should rest upon a showing of neglect by the bankrupt of his property. Here, this subsection has to do only with the bond and the remedies thereunder, and limits the power of seizure that flows from § 2 (3) and (15), by requiring the giving by the petitioning creditors of a bond against the possible dismissal of their proceedings.³⁵⁸ The order appointing a receiver of the alleged bankrupt's property should require the petitioners to give the bond before the receiver takes possession.³⁵⁹ Under the general statutes, a bond by a single surety company will be sufficient.³⁶⁰ It should be noted also that, unlike § 69-a, there is here no provision for releasing property seized, on the filing of another bond by the alleged bankrupt. It is presumable, however, that the court, under the broad powers conferred by § 2 (15), could withdraw its officer on receipt of a satisfactory bond or cash indemnity.

b. Remedies under bond; costs.—The purpose of the bond is to indemnify the alleged bankrupt against "all costs, expenses, and damages occasioned by such seizure, taking, and detention," if it should prove upon final trial that the debtor was not a bankrupt and that his custody of the property should not have been disturbed.³⁶¹ The section does not apply to any other kind of a bond, so that the remedy is not applicable in an action upon a bond given to restrain an execution sale of the bankrupt's property.³⁶² Under this subdivision counsel fees, expenses and damages provided for the seizing and holding of the property of an alleged bankrupt are for special services or damages occasioned by reason of the wrongful taking of the property of another.³⁶³ Costs, as in a suit in equity, are also authorized in all involuntary cases by General Order XXXIV. By the last paragraph of the subsection, if the petition is dismissed or withdrawn, the respondent must be "allowed" such "costs." By the last sentence, the same "shall be fixed and allowed by the court." Stripped of surplusage, these words undoubtedly mean that the court, in dismissing or on the withdrawal of the petition, may tax counsel fees, costs, expenses, and damages, and thus liquidate the amount of the liability of the obligors.³⁶⁴ Counsel fees expended and damages provided by sary disbursements out of the funds in the receiver's custody. Matter of Independent Mach., etc. Corp. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 41 Am. B. R. 517, 251 Fed. 484.

this subdivision are not taxable in the bankruptcy proceeding, but are to be recovered in an independent suit upon the bond provided.³⁶⁵ The language of the statute creates a new right which is not dependent upon the existence of either malice or lack of probable cause in instituting the proceedings; damages, costs, counsel fees and expenses, must be allowed by the bankruptcy court alone, upon the dismissal or withdrawal of the petition.³⁶⁶ The only counsel fees allowable are those for services performed in proper efforts to secure the discharge of the property from the writ of seizure.³⁶⁷ Only the costs, expenses and damages resulting from the seizure and detention of the alleged bankrupt's property, may be taxed;³⁶⁸ the law cannot be invoked to recover costs and expenses occasioned in making a successful defense to the charge of bankruptcy.^{369a} And the costs should only be allowed against the person upon whose

R. 84, the court said: "A new right is created by section 3 (e). Without this provision no damages could be recovered on the dismissal of the petition unless malice and lack of probable cause appeared. The statutory right, however, is not dependent upon the existence of either malice or lack of probable cause. But the statute creating the right also provides a specific remedy; indeed it creates no right distinct from and independent of the remedy. The language is not that the plaintiff shall be entitled to damages which may be allowed by the court, but that he shall be allowed his damages and that these shall be fixed and allowed by the court. This clearly does not mean by any court, but by the bankruptcy court. In other words, the new right is not to sue for damages, but to have damages allowed in the bankruptcy proceedings by the bankruptcy court."

Allowances for seizure.—In the case of In re Smith (D. C., Okl.), 16 Am. B. R. 478, 146 Fed. 923, it was held that the alleged bankrupt, on a dismissal of the petition, cannot be allowed for (1) counsel fees for services rendered in opposing the petition and securing its dismissal, (2) loss of credit claimed to have been occasioned by the seizure of his goods and closing up his business, where by his conduct before the proceedings in bankruptcy, he had destroyed and materially impaired his credit, (3) the costs and expenses allowed to the receiver in bankruptcy for care and sale of the goods taken under the order of seizure, but therefrom should be deducted taxes assessed against the bankrupt, but paid by the receiver. Selkregg v. Hamilton (D. C., Pa.), 16 Am. B. R. 474, 144 Fed. 557, awarding damages caused by the freezing and bursting of pipes in the factory while the marshal was in possession.

Expenses of receivership.—A bond given by petitioning creditors upon the appointment of a receiver conditioned to pay their costs and damages does not cover a claim for the expenses of the receivership. Matter of El Sevilla Restaurant (D. C., Fla.), 41 Am. B. R. 608, 253 Fed. 410.

The expense of the appointment of a receiver should be imposed upon the petitioning creditors in the first instance, but the receiver who is acting as an officer of the court should not be charged with expenses necessarily incurred in the performance of his duties. *Matter of Independent Mach. etc. Corp., Inc. application the property was seized and detained,³⁶⁹ and should not be in excess of the aggregate of the bonds executed by the petitioning creditors.^{369a} There is no liability except for the usual costs, unless it appears that the petitioners acted without probable cause and maliciously.³⁷⁰ And if it appears that the estate suffered no loss by the seizure, but, on the contrary, resulted in actual gain, none of the costs and expenses incident to the receivership should be charged against the applicant.³⁷¹ Where judgment is awarded against the petitioning creditors and their bondsmen for counsel fees, costs, disbursements and expenses incurred in the proceeding a petition for a claim for damages under § 69-a for a wrongful seizure of the alleged bankrupt's property, will not be sustained.³⁷² A judgment recovered by a petitioning creditor against the alleged bankrupt subsequent to the dismissal of the petition may be set-off against any damages awarded to the alleged bankrupt.^{372a} The only liability upon a bond given under this subsection is to those who were respondents when the bond was given; if a subsequent respondent wishes protection he must move for a new bond.³⁷³ The alleged bankrupt should file his bill of costs with the clerk, and give notice to the creditors.³⁷⁴ It has been thought that the court may also enter judgment on the bond. This is doubtful. The obligors are not parties to the proceeding. Besides, a comparison of this paragraph with that of the Henderson bill³⁷⁵ shows that a specific grant of power to that end was dropped out before the bill was passed.

Possession not taken by receiver.—Where the property of an alleged bankrupt was not taken possession of by the receiver in bankruptcy, but remained in possession of a sheriff under foreclosure proceedings until after the trial of the issue in bankruptcy, the bankrupt cannot recoup any damages from the petitioner's bondsmen. Matter of Terusaki, 39 Am. I. WHO MAY BECOME BANKRUPTS.

a. History and comparative legislation.—Originally, bankruptcy was available to traders only. In most of the Latin countries, it is still limited to those who are "habitually occupied in commercial transactions."¹ This continued to be the law of England until the act of 1861, though prior to that time a remedy somewhat equivalent was granted to non-traders through numerous insolvent debtor acts. To-day, any English "debtor" may be adjudged a bankrupt.² The Canadian act applies to all debtors except that wage earners and farmers may not be adjudged involuntary bankrupts. It includes partnerships and corporations.^{2a} Our first law, being purely involuntary, applied only to "merchants . . . actually using the trade of merchandise, . . . or as a banker, broker, factor, underwriter, or marine insurer"³—the latter clause a somewhat unscientific extension of the meaning of "trader." The voluntary features of the law of 1841 were available to "all persons owing debts,"⁴ and in this it was the exact equivalent of the present law; while the involuntary features were confined to the same persons as the previous statute. Under the act of 1867, any person "owing debts provable in bankruptcy exceeding $300"⁵ might file a voluntary petition or be thrown into involuntary bankruptcy, the distinction as to traders having, as in England, by this time entirely vanished. Partnerships are, in England, amenable to bankruptcy,⁶ but corporations are not. Our first bankruptcy law seems to have been silent as to both commercial entities. The law of 1841 provided for partnership bankruptcies, but not for those of corporations. Our statute of 1867 put partnerships on the same footing as individuals; and as to corporations was much broader than the present law, as it existed prior to the amendments of 1910.⁷

b. Amendatory act of 1903.—The change as to the bankruptcy of corporations is discussed later in this section.⁸ The Ray amendatory bill added mining corporations to those liable to involuntary bankruptcy, and permitted those classes of corporations which might be petitioned against, to ask for voluntary bankruptcy, provided their stockholders took certain preliminary steps. Corporations are now more general than partnerships, and, even in the smaller communities, are increasing in number and importance; many of them, not being strictly either "trading" or "mercantile" associations, were, without apparent reason, exempted from the operation of this uniform national law. But the Senate amendments struck out even the provisions of the House bill making the voluntary bankruptcy of purely business corporations possible. Thus the only substantial change was the insertion of the word "mining," considered later.

c. Amendatory act of 1910.—The amendatory act of 1910 carried into the bankruptcy law, provisions which were sought to be incorporated by the Ray amendatory bill, introduced in the House in 1903, permitting the voluntary bankruptcy of purely business corporations. The amendment of 1910 has gone farther than this, by making the bankruptcy act applicable in all respects, as regards both involuntary and voluntary bankruptcies, to all business or commercial corporations except "municipal, railroad, insurance or banking corporations." The amendment omitted from clause b, the words "corporations engaged principally in manufacturing, trading, printing, publishing, mining or mercantile pursuits," and inserted in place thereof the provision authorizing the involuntary bankruptcy of any

"moneyed, business or commercial corporation, except a municipal, railroad, insurance or banking corporation." Except as to the corporations specified, any corporation may become a voluntary bankrupt, or may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. In the law as amended the character of the corporation is not material in determining whether such corporation is subject to bankruptcy. If the corporation does not fall within the exception, it may become or be adjudged a bankrupt. The great number of cases which have been decided, involving the question as to the application of the act to certain corporations, are no longer in point. These cases are not germane to the subject except to show the development of the bankruptcy law, or except as to a proceeding now pending which was instituted prior to June 25, 1910, the date of the taking effect of the amendatory act. This amendment may not be given a retroactive effect.⁹

II. VOLUNTARY BANKRUPTCY.

a. Persons who may file petition; debts.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Any person who owes debts in any amount, no matter how small, may file a voluntary petition. Such filing is not an act of bankruptcy, as under the law of 1867 and the present English law, but is an ex parte application that gives jurisdiction to the court to decree it. A voluntary petitioner may even be solvent.¹⁰ There is nothing in the act which requires the person to be insolvent, and there seems to be no reason why, if a solvent person cares to have his property distributed among his creditors in bankruptcy, he should not be allowed to do so. It will not be necessary to allege insolvency in the petition, nor prove it, to procure an adjudication.¹¹ A creditor may not intervene to oppose the petition.¹²

(2) JURISDICTIONAL FACTS.—The court is bound to ascertain whether the required jurisdictional facts exist; it must be alleged in the petition, that the debtor is within the jurisdiction of the court, that he owes debts and surrendered; then the bankrupt is given an acquittance of such percentages of his debts not thus paid and may commence his business life anew. Baylor v. Rawlings (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 28 Am. B. that other essential requirements have been complied with.¹³ Only on these grounds can a creditor vacate the adjudication.¹⁴ "Debts" means debts, demands, or claims provable in bankruptcy.¹⁵ Debts not discharged, unless provable, are thus not debts for the purpose here discussed. A debtor owing but one provable debt may be adjudged a voluntary bankrupt.¹⁶ If the single debt is not dischargeable, because based on fraud or deceit, the proceeding will not lie.¹⁷ It will be noticed that the amendment of 1910 has omitted the words, "owing debts." There seems no good reason for eliminating these words. It is probable that the change was inadvertent and should be considered as an error. It will not materially affect the operation of the act, for it is obvious that there can be no bankruptcy without the existence of debts. It must still be held that a person must owe a debt or debts in order to be qualified to become a voluntary bankrupt. A farmer or wage-earner may be adjudged a voluntary bankrupt, although he is exempt from involuntary bankruptcy.¹⁸

R. 757, 180 Fed. 943; in this case the court calls attention to § 72 of the original act which expressly provided against the retroactive effect of the act generally, and that it might be argued that the subsequent amendments, which had no such clause, were on that account intended to be retroactive. The court concludes, however, that such section should be construed as a limited retroactive clause, and that the omission of a similar provision in an amendment of the act, is no ground for the inference that such amendment was meant to have a retroactive effect.

(3) CORPORATIONS MAY BECOME VOLUNTARY BANKRUPTS.—It was the intent of the amendment of 1910 to permit voluntary bankruptcy by all corporations except those specified. The amendment is broad enough to include corporations of every kind except those specified, regardless of their purposes or the laws under which they were incorporated.¹⁹ The exception does not include a corporation operating a plant to generate and sell electricity or gas,^{19a} nor a local electric street railway.^{19b} Under the law prior to the amendment a corporation was not entitled to the benefits of the act as a voluntary bankrupt. It could only by indirection be thrown into bankruptcy by its own act, by admitting in writing its inability to pay its

16. Single provable debt.—In the case of In re Schwaninger (D. C., Wis.), 16 Am. B. R. 427, 144 Fed. 555, it appeared from the schedules of the bankrupt that he had but one debt, which was in the form of a judgment. The creditor raised the point that § 4 requires that a person must have "debts," clearly indicating that it was the purpose of the act to apply only to such debtors as have a plurality of debts. The court applied subdivision 29 of § 1, which provides that "words importing the plural number may be applied to and mean only a single person or thing," and it was held that this provision made § 4 applicable to a debtor who owed a single debt. The court said: "It is difficult to understand why a debtor owing a single obligation should not fall within the merciful policy of the act. It is an accidental circumstance that the indebtedness was not distributed among two or more creditors. His case is clearly within the spirit of the act, and no good reason has been suggested why he should not be within its scope and operation. It is my belief that Congress had not in mind any purpose to discriminate against an unfortunate debtor who is oppressed by a single obligation, and that the will of Congress will be effectuated by making the definition above recited, applicable to section 4, and treating the term 'debt' where it occurs in such section as equivalent to 'debts.'" Necessity for assets.—In order that a corporation may be entitled to be adjudged a bankrupt, it is not essential that it should own property, or, if it does own property, that such property should be subject to administration in bankruptcy. Matter of Hargadine-McKittrick, etc., Co. (D. C., Mo.), 39 Am. B. R. 142, 239 Fed. 155.

Estoppel.—The fact that a corporation appears as a defendant in a State court and contests matters pertinent to its financial condition and maintains its solvency does not estop it from thereafter filing a petition in bankruptcy. Benevolent orders.—A local lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, incorporated under the Benevolent Orders Law of the State of New York, is a corporation within the meaning and intent of the Bankruptcy Act entitled to file a voluntary petition in bankruptcy. Matter of Carthage Lodge, I. O. O. F. (D. C., N. Y.), 36 Am. B. R. 873, 230 Fed. 694. In this case Judge Ray discusses at length the laws relating to corporations and concludes that any corporation however incorporated may avail debts and its willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt on that ground.²⁰ The amendment does not specify the action to be taken by a corporation to obtain voluntary bankruptcy. In this respect it differs from the act of 1867. This act permitted voluntary bankruptcy by a corporation and prescribed conditions under which it might be obtained.²¹ In the absence of special provisions in the Bankruptcy Act, reference must be made to the State statutes, controlling the authority of officers and directors of corporations to dispose of the property of the corporation for the benefit of its creditors.²² A State statute which prohibits a sale, assignment or transfer of the franchise and property of a corporation without the consent of the stockholders holding at least two-thirds of the capital stock, does not prohibit filing a voluntary petition by the board of directors of a corporation.²³ Under the New York statute a board of directors alone has power to determine whether a general assignment for the benefit of creditors shall be made.²⁴ Under such a statute the president of a corporation has no such power unless authority is conferred upon him by the board of directors.²⁵ Where a petition of a corporation to be adjudged a voluntary bankrupt does not show that corporate action had been taken, authorizing the president of the corporation to execute and file the petition, the court has no jurisdiction to adjudge the corporation a voluntary bankrupt.²⁶ It seems to have been recognized under the original act that a board of directors of a corporation, who are charged with the conduct of its business, may declare the inability of the corporation to pay its debts and its willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt in accordance with clause 5 of § 3-a.²⁷ In analogy to this principle a board of directors of a corporation, having general control of the affairs of the corporation, should be authorized to file a petition for the voluntary bankruptcy of the corporation, in the absence of some statutory provision limiting the powers of the board in this respect.²⁸

(4) INFANTS.—Infants, being persons, it was held under the law of 1841 that they were entitled to the benefits of the act.²⁹ On the other hand, under the next law, it appears that they were not.³⁰ This seems to be the rule under the present act.³¹ It also seems to be the law in England.³² An infant, either petitioning or petitioned against, must appear to have capacity to owe. It is yet a mooted question, however, whether an infant who has either held himself out and traded as an adult, or who alleges only debts for necessities, cannot be adjudged bankrupt on his own petition. The better opinion seems to be that he can.³³ If an infant is liable for the debts which he contracts under the common law, as for necessities, or under a State statute, as for contracts made by him while engaged in business as an adult, there seems no good reason to hold that he is not entitled to the privileges of the act, and that he may not become a voluntary bankrupt.³⁴ Infants with corporation to petition for the voluntary bankruptcy of the corporation. The court said: "A board of directors ought to have power to put the company into bankruptcy. They have care of the general business of the corporation. They are the persons who know whether the corporation is able to go on or not. It might very well happen, that under the articles and by-laws of the corporation, it would be impossible to hold a meeting of the stockholders for months. Under these circumstances the bankruptcy of the corporation might be delayed so long that in many cases the purpose of the bankrupt law would be defeated and preferences given. I am satisfied that a board of directors at a duly called meeting, has the power to put the corporation into bankruptcy." Affid. 29 Am. B. R. 586.

The directors of a Pennsylvania corporation may authorize the filing of a voluntary petition in bankruptcy by the president and secretary. Matter of Foster Paint and Varnish Co. (D. C., Pa.), 31 Am. B. R. 548, 210 Fed. 652.

Sufficiency of resolution.—A resolution of the board of directors of a corporation, authorizing the cashier, treasurer, and book-keeper to prosecute in the name of the corporation a petition in bankruptcy to final discharge, is sufficient to authorize a voluntary proceeding, and it is unnecessary that the resolution authorize, in strict conformity with section 3a (5) of the Bankruptcy Act, an admission in writing on the part of the corporation of its inability to pay its debts, and its willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt. Bell v. Blessing (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 35 Am. B. R. 672, 225 Fed. 750.

Meeting of directors.—Two of the three directors of a corporation met and adopted a resolution that the corporation go into bankruptcy, without notice to the third director who had quarreled with his associates, had absented himself from all meetings for ten months, had brought suit to rescind his purchase of stock, thus making himself ineligible to be elected a director under the Minnesota law, and had announced his refusal to act as an officer and stockholder.

It appeared that the law of Minnesota provided that the business of the corporation should be managed by a board of at least three directors, elected by the stockholders and that a majority should constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, but there was no special provision for filling vacancies either by directors or stockholders. Held, that when the two directors met they constituted a board which had authority to adopt a resolution that the corporation should go into bankruptcy. *Dodge v. ³⁴ In re Bryce (D. C., Iowa), 2 Am. B. R. 197, 93 Fed. 942, in which case it was held that under the laws of Iowa, providing that if a minor engages in business as an adult, and the party giving him credit has good reason to believe him to be of full age, the minor cannot, upon becoming of age, disaffirm his contracts made while an infant. Such infant may be adjudged a bankrupt upon his own petition.

When infants may petition.—The bankruptcy act nowhere excepts infants from its provisions or benefits, and there is no ground of public policy for excluding them where they owe debts which can be enforced against them and their property, such as no liabilities, except such as require their ratification on coming of age, are not entitled to the benefits of the act; and this, not so much because they are infants, as because they do not owe debts which they are bound to pay.³⁵ Since general contracts of an infant have no force or validity if disaffirmed by the infant on coming of age, it would be a frivolous act for courts to permit the institution and prosecution of proceedings which might afterward be practically annulled by such disaffirmance.³⁶ Where an involuntary petition is filed against an infant and he alleges infancy as a defense thereto he may be adjudicated a bankrupt if, after becoming of age he ratifies his debts.³⁷ It seems settled that when a partnership adjudication is sought and the only defense is that one partner is an infant, the firm and the solvent partner should be declared bankrupts, but the proceeding dismissed as to the infant.³⁸ Another problem which has arisen in this connection is whether an adjudication can be granted on a copartnership made up of an adult and an infant, without notice to the infant. It seems that no notice is necessary.³⁹

(5) LUNATICS.—A lunatic may not, save in a lucid interval, file a voluntary petition.⁴⁰ The English law and practice seem to provide for intervention by the lunatic's committee, as well as the appointment of a committee ad litem; such officer having power to do for the lunatic any act, permitted or required by the bankruptcy law, which the lunatic could have done if sane.⁴¹ This is probably not the law in this country.⁴² In voluntary cases it must, therefore, appear that, both at the time of the verification of the petition and of its filing, the petitioner was compos mentis. But it is still doubtful in England, and more doubtful here, whether under any circumstances a person actually insane can be adjudged a bankrupt.⁴³ If the proceeding be involuntary, it must at least appear that he was sane at the time of the commission of the act of bankruptcy.⁴⁴ The insanity of a bankrupt after his adjudication does not, however, abate the proceeding; the bankruptcy court may administer his estate where its jurisdiction is based upon acts of bankruptcy alleged to have been committed while he was sane.⁴⁵

(6) MARRIED WOMEN.—They may become bankrupt in all States where they can contract debts.⁴⁶ Where a married woman is liable only in case her separate estate is charged, it must clearly appear that her debts were so charged.⁴⁷ Where a coverture defeats the debt a married woman cannot avail herself of the act.⁴⁸ Disability to contract has been removed by statute in nearly, if not quite, all the States.

(7) ALIENS.—Our former acts limited the operation of the law to persons residing within the jurisdiction of the United States.⁴⁹ There is no such limitation in the present law.⁵⁰ But, if not domiciled or with their principal place of business within the United States, they must have property here.⁵¹ The change made in the former laws by the present act is, therefore, of little practical importance.

(8) INDIANS.—Whether an Indian may become a bankrupt depends on his "owing debts." Until he becomes a citizen, he is subject to certain statutory disabilities in respect to the making of contracts.⁵² But, aside from this limitation, it seems that he may become either a voluntary or be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt.⁵³

45. Act of bankruptcy committed while sane.—In re Kehler (D. C., N. Y.), 18 Am. B. R. 596, 153 Fed. 235. This case was affirmed in 19 Am. B. R. 513, 159 Fed. 55, in which the court said: "If he, (Kehler) committed the acts of bankruptcy alleged in the petition while insane, the adjudication is wrong which, irrespective of technical objections to the pleadings and proceedings of his committee, should be righted. If, on the other hand, these acts were committed while sane, there was no error in continuing the case, even though the bankrupt subsequently became insane. Section 8 of the bankruptcy act provides that the insanity of the bankrupt shall not abate the proceedings, and section 1 provides that the word 'bankrupt' shall include a person against whom an involuntary petition has been filed. It is manifest therefore, that if Kehler committed an act of bankruptcy while sane, and by reason of such act the court obtained jurisdiction, it can continue the proceedings notwithstanding the subsequent insanity of the bankrupt. The district judge correctly states the proposition as follows: 'True, an insane person cannot commit an act of bankruptcy, but if Kohler was compos mentis at the time the acts were committed, the petition by creditors being filed before he was adjudged insane, I think the court acquired jurisdiction of the proceedings.'"

Where an alien residing abroad and having a deposit with a bank in New York City made a general assignment in England, and a petition in bankruptcy was filed against him in the district, including New York City, within four months after the assignment, the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction. It seems that a bankruptcy court may decline jurisdiction if the creditors as well as the alleged bankrupt are all aliens residing abroad. Mater of Berthoud (D. C., N. Y.), 36 Am. B. The proceeding is analogous to that of a living debtor, save that the decedent's personal representative stands in his stead. The practice is assimilated to that in chancery on the administration of solvent estates. An executor who, as such, has carried on a business and incurred debts pursuant to the will of his testator, may also be adjudged a bankrupt.⁵⁴ None of our bankruptcy laws have had similiar provisions.⁵⁵ It seems, however, that when a surviving partner applies, the partnership may be adjudged bankrupt, and the Federal court thereby acquires jurisdiction over the estate of the deceased partner in process of administration in a probate court.⁵⁶ There being no express power to administer the estates of deceased insolvents, resort must be had in such cases to the usual State tribunals. If, however, death occurs after the adjudication, the estate continues in bankruptcy.⁵⁷

(10) PARTNERSHIPS.—This is fully considered under Section Five.⁵⁸

III. INVOLUNTARY BANKRUPTCY.

a. Persons who may be adjudged involuntary bankrupts.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection b of this section declares what persons and corporations may be adjudged involuntary bankrupts. In discussing the principles applicable to persons who may become voluntary bankrupts, we also considered the jurisdiction of the courts to adjudicate the involuntary bankruptcy of such persons; the rules applicable to the voluntary bankruptcy of infants, lunatics and other persons mentioned under the foregoing head, are applicable to the involuntary bankruptcy of such persons.⁵⁹ The debtor petitioned against must owe at least $1,000. Two classes of persons cannot be petitioned against—wage-earners and farmers. The word “natural” is used to qualify the word “person,” except for which any corporation might be included, because of the definition of “person” as contained in § 1 (19). The subsection specifically states the classes of corporations which may be adjudged involuntary bankrupts. The words “unincorporated company” are considered later.⁶⁰

(2) STATUS OF ALLEGED BANKRUPT; TIME.—The question as to the status of the alleged bankrupt at a particular time so as to entitle him to exemption from an involuntary proceeding becomes important. When the debts from which the alleged bankrupt will be discharged were contracted, he may have been engaged in business and his occupation may have been changed subsequently to that of a wage-earner or farmer. Or on the other hand his occupation may have changed since the debts were contracted from that of a wage-earner or farmer to that of a business man. In a number of cases, some of them controlling in their respective jurisdictions, it has been ruled that the question whether an insolvent is exempt from involuntary adjudication will depend upon the occupation in which he is engaged at the time the acts of bankruptcy were committed.⁶¹ It is quite apparent that a man should not be permitted to evade bankruptcy by changing his occupation, in which his property was acquired and his debts contracted, to that in which under the statute he would be exempt from adjudication. For instance the property acquired as a merchant may not be exempt from administration in bankruptcy because the merchant becomes subsequently a wage-earner; so that in such a case it is eminently proper to govern the exemption by the status of the alleged bankrupt at the time the debts were contracted.⁶² A person who has acquired property and incurred debts as a merchant may not avoid bankruptcy by becoming a wage-earner, either before or after the act of bankruptcy; it is in such a case the occupation of the debtor at the time the debts were contracted and not at the time the act of bankruptcy was committed which will control.⁶³ But where a wage-earner or farmer becomes a merchant and thus amenable to bankruptcy, his status at the time the act of bankruptcy was committed may

Change of status before filing petition.—In the case of In re Burgin (D. C., Ala.), 22 Am. B. R. 574, 173 Fed. 726, it was held that a change of occupation to one of the exempt pursuits, between the commission of an act of bankruptcy and the filing of a petition against him, will not defeat the operation of the act, as the bankrupt's status is to be determined as of the period during which he contracted the debts and acquired or owned the assets scheduled.

Engaged in farming when act was committed.—In the case of Matter of Leland (D. C., Mich.), 25 Am. B. R. 209, 185 Fed. 830, the court said: "It is important to know at what time the exempt status must have existed in order to prevent the adjudication. The natural meaning of the words used by the statute would indicate that they referred to the time of filing the petition, but the necessities of the case have led to the conclusion that this meaning cannot be adopted. There is some authority for dating the question back to the time when the indebtedness was incurred; but this would many times give rise to great confusion: as if, for example, part of the indebtedness of the petitioning creditors had a favorable position under this ruling and part did not; it does not seem necessary in the ordinary case to go back so far. . . . It does not follow that the time when the debts accrued and the nature of the debts of the petitioning creditors, are wholly immaterial. They have accrued in large part or wholly out of business other than farming. This fact may be quite persuasive as indicating that the debtor was not chiefly engaged in farming." Matter of Desney (D. C., Md.), 33 Am. B. R. 656, 219 Fed. 294.

Bank (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 16 Am. B. R. 678, 145 Fed. 162, 76 C. C. A. 132; In re Burgin (D. C., Ala.), 22 Am. B. R. 574, 173 Fed. 726, holding that the status of the alleged bankrupt as to his occupation is to be determined as of the period when he contracted the debts to be proved and acquired the property to be administered; and when he was at that time engaged in mercantile pursuits he cannot defeat the operation of the law by thereafter engaging in an exempt occupation. See Am. B. R. Digest, § 122.

Application of rule.—The rule that the status of an alleged involuntary bankrupt is to be determined as of the date when his debts were contracted is not the general rule, and is only to be adopted when the equities of the case require such a construction, it being based on the equitable idea that the exemption from involuntary proceedings allowed by the statute was not intended as a means of escape for insolvents whose property was acquired and whose debts were incurred in a recent non-exempt occupation. Harris v. Tapp (D. C., Ga.), 37 Am. B. R. 564, 235 Fed. 918.

well be deemed the controlling factor. In any event the circumstances existing in each particular case must be considered. In view of the fact that the main purpose of the Bankruptcy Act is to provide for the distribution of the assets of the bankrupt among his creditors having provable debts and the discharge of the bankrupt from such debts, it seems reasonable to assert that the exemption from bankruptcy should pertain exclusively to the occupation of the bankrupt when the debts were incurred. There is no question, however, that the occupation of the alleged bankrupt at the time the petition is filed is not controlling.⁶⁴ A change in occupation from business to farming since the act of bankruptcy will not avail the debtor.⁶⁵

(3) WAGE-EARNERS.—A wage-earner is defined in § 1 (27) as a person who "works for wages, salary, or hire, at a compensation not exceeding one thousand five hundred dollars per year." Under this subsection (§ 4-b) a wage-earner cannot be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. It is not presumable that, were he not thus excepted, creditors would often resort to a court of bankruptcy against such a debtor.⁶⁶ The exemption of wage-earners from the operation of the act applies to those who are dependent for a living upon the result of their individual effort, without the aid of property or capital.^{66a} To bring a person within the exception it should appear that the earning of wages is his paramount occupation.⁶⁷ In considering the definition of "wage-earner" in § 1, cases were cited indicating what constitutes a wage-earner under the statute.⁶⁸

(4) PERSONS ENGAGED CHIEFLY IN FARMING OR THE TILLAGE OF THE SOIL.—

(I) In general.—No person answering this description can be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. The phrase seems to be construed strictly. The words "the tillage of the soil" are not used as a definition of what constitutes farming; tillage is a part of farming but is not co-extensive with the whole of farming.⁶⁹ Whether a debtor answers this description is a question of fact to be determined in each case on its merits.^{69a} The affairs and occupation of men are of infinite complexity. It is not possible to lay down any precise rule which will in every case enable a court to say with certainty in what occupa-

The words "farming or the tillage of the soil" as used in section 4-b of the bankruptcy act, expresses the same thought, that is, the word "farming" and the words "tillage of the soil," mean the same thing. Hart-Parr Co. v. Parkley (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 36 Am. B. R. 540, 231 Fed. 913.

Wage-earner distinguished from farmer.—A farmer is exempt from involuntary proceedings, whatever his other interests, if farming is his chief occupation; a wage-earner is exempt only when he actually pursues the calling which the term describes. The farmer works for himself; the wage-earner is an employee, and this implies service for another which is substantially exclusive. This characteristic difference between farmers and wage-earners is clearly recognized in the language of section 4b of the bankruptcy act. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. Shellhouse (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 35 Am. B. R. 720, 228 Fed. 493.

(II) Chief occupation.—Farming or tillage of the soil must be the chief occupation. Mere physical exertions are not the determining factor; rather that occupation which the person deems of paramount importance to his welfare.⁷¹ The relative amount of time a man devotes to various lines of endeavor in which he is interested is doubtless one circumstance to be taken into account.⁷² He must be engaged "chiefly" in the business or occupation of farming and must derive therefrom his chief means of livelihood.⁷³ He may be engaged in other enterprises, in which he has invested money and which take considerable of his time, so long as farming constitutes his chief occupation.⁷⁴ When a debtor follows two pursuits the relative amount of his indebtedness contracted in one and the other may be taken into account as an aid in determining in which he was chiefly engaged.⁷⁵ It has been held that a man engaged both in the business of farming and at that of raising cattle on a large scale was, nevertheless, within this exception.⁷⁶ Likewise, perhaps, when the chief occupations is to raise cattle and hogs for the market, provided he raises them on the farm, or feeds them largely from crops raised thereon.⁷⁷ But a cattle buyer is not engaged in farming because he takes cattle, purchased by him for the market, to a farm for feeding.⁷⁸ Dairying is usually a mere Raising stock for the market.—In the case of In re Dwyer (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 913, 184 Fed. 880, it appeared that the alleged bankrupt owned and dwelt upon a farm of 160 acres, upon which he raised corn and oats on 46 acres and grass for feeding purposes on the balance; upon this farm he fattened cattle and hogs for the market; he raised some of the stock upon the farm and purchased a considerable number which he brought to the farm; after the cattle and hogs were properly fattened, he sold them to drovers and sometimes shipped them in car-load lots to the market; it was necessary to purchase about four times as much grain as he raised upon his farm to feed the stock; he never bought cattle as a dealer in live stock buys them, with the expectation of speculating and taking advantage of market conditions. It was held that the alleged bankrupt was chiefly engaged in farming and was therefore within the exemption.

include express allegations negating the statutory exceptions. The allegation and proof should also show that the alleged bankrupt was not in one of these excepted classes at the time of the act of bankruptcy.⁹⁵ A defense based on an allegation that he was, may be raised by a responding creditor, and, when raised, goes to the jurisdiction, and, if not met by a replication, is conclusive.⁹⁶ If the petition is defective in that it does not contain allegations to the effect that the alleged bankrupt is not within either of the excepted classes, the defect may be cured by amendment.⁹⁷ Where a person has been adjudged insane at a certain date with lucid intervals until a certain date and without lucid intervals thereafter, a presumption of insanity arises from the date first mentioned, and the burden of proof is upon the petitioning creditors to show that the alleged act of bankruptcy was committed during a lucid interval.⁹⁸

b. Corporations which may be adjudged involuntary bankrupts.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The definition of "corporations" will be found in § 1 (6). It does not, of course, include municipal corporations, but it would seem to comprise membership corporations and religious, educational and eleemosynary corporations and the like. But because of the limitation to "moneyed, business or commercial corporations," membership corporations, incorporated for other than business or commercial purposes, may not be adjudicated bankrupts. Under the law of 1867 any business, moneyed or commercial corporation might be thrown into bankruptcy. As has already been seen the amendatory act of 1910 has practically conformed the present bankruptcy act to that of 1867, so far as the persons and corporations who may be adjudicated bankrupts are concerned.⁹⁹ If the act of bankruptcy was committed prior to the taking effect of the amendment of 1910, bankruptcy may not be decreed unless the corporation was one which might have been adjudicated a bankrupt under the laws which existed prior to the amendment.¹⁰⁰

(2) EXCEPTIONS AS TO INSURANCE AND BANKING CORPORATIONS.—The exception as to "municipal, railroad, insurance or banking corporations" is absolute. "Moneyed" corporations are usually regarded as including banking and insurance corporations, and are so defined in the laws of New York.¹⁰¹ The fact does not affect the construction or application of the exception, as it is obvious that it was the intent of Congress to exempt such corporations from the operation of the act. The exemption will be limited strictly to corporations which fall within the specified classes. It does not include a fraternal order which as an incident to its corporate existence provides aid for the beneficiaries of its deceased members.¹⁰² There are reasons of policy why banking corporations should be excluded. They are trustees of the people, whose debts are always due and whose credit is necessary to trade and industry. They are not only creatures of the State, organized under State statutes, but are supervised and inspected by the State at frequent intervals, thus making it difficult for them to commit preferences.¹⁰³ A national bank incorporated under the national banking act would not, for obvious reasons, be subject to involuntary bankruptcy, although not included within the expressed provisions of this exception.¹⁰⁴ It would seem that only those entities which are strictly banks and thus subject to official espionage, are excepted.¹⁰⁵ Banking corporations do not include private bankers, doing business under State supervision, and no special significance is attributed to the omission by the amendment of 1910 of the reference to private bankers in the original act.¹⁰⁶

(3) DISSOLUTION OF CORPORATION.—The attempted dissolution of a corporation having undistributed assets or unpaid debts under a State statute providing for the winding up of a corporation, does not deprive the bankruptcy court of its jurisdiction, when such corporation has committed an act of bankruptcy prior to such dissolution.¹⁰⁷ A corporation having committed an act of bankruptcy, the jurisdiction of a bankruptcy court may not be defeated by prior proceedings for dissolution;¹⁰⁸ or by the appointment of a receiver at the suit of creditors,^{109a} and this is true although in the suit appointing a receiver the court grants an injunction restraining the corporation, its officers,

Jurisdiction over private bankers.—Since the bankruptcy act confers upon courts of bankruptcy jurisdiction to adjudge private bankers bankrupt and to administer their property, this jurisdiction is not only paramount, but is exclusive, and State laws assuming to confer upon State officers or courts authority to administer the property of such bank are superseded and must give way when the bankruptcy act is properly invoked. Matter of Sage (D. C., Mo.), 35 Am. B. R. 436, 224 Fed. 525.

Effect of dissolution.—If a corporation suffers or permits some of its creditors to obtain preferences through legal proceedings, and its stockholders subsequently sue for and obtain a dissolution, the effect of which is to permit the alleged preferences to stand, such corporation has committed an act of bankruptcy and petitioning creditors may have the corporation adjudged a bankrupt, notwithstanding a decree of dissolution in the State court and the appointment therein of a receiver. Scheuer v. Smith & Montgomery Book Co. (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 7 Am. B. R. 384, 112 Fed. 407. In this case it was argued that as a dissolution of the corporation had been adjudged and decreed in the State court prior to the hearing, although since the institution of the proceedings in the bankruptcy court, such proceedings abated and no adjudication in bankruptcy could be rendered, as the corporation is dead and no judgment can be rendered against a dead man. The court said: "As to this, we think it only necessary to refer to § 8 of the bankrupt act in relation to the death or insanity of the bankrupt and by analogy hold that the section applies to a corporation that seeks by suicide to defeat properly instituted proceedings in bankruptcy."

agents, or creditors from interfering in any way with the management of the corporation by the receiver, or from prosecuting any action or proceeding against it.¹⁰⁹ Likewise the fact that a corporation after committing an act of bankruptcy, forfeits its franchise, does not deprive the bankruptcy court of jurisdiction.¹¹⁰ If the alleged act of bankruptcy was committed prior to the beginning of proceedings against the corporation for dissolution, and within the four months' period, the corporation may be declared a bankrupt, although dissolution was effected in the State court prior to the beginning of bankruptcy proceedings.¹¹¹ The rule is that an insolvent corporation, having committed an act of bankruptcy, may not defeat the purpose of the bankruptcy act by dissolution proceedings in a State court, but its property must be administered under that act, for the benefit of its creditors, upon the institution of proper proceedings.¹¹²

(4) UNINCORPORATED COMPANIES.—Under this section an "unincorporated company" may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. This phrase was inserted while the bankruptcy act was in conference committee, and is not explained by any of the reports which contain the bill in its various stages. The rarity of failures of companies of this character, other than those organized for business purposes, will, however, prevent it from being either dangerous to such bodies or of much value to creditors. The phrase manifestly means all those private bodies which occupy the middle ground between partnerships and stock corporations, possessing some of the powers and privileges of both, and is generally so recognized by the courts.¹¹³ Such

The jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court attached or its right to act arose when the company being insolvent committed the acts of bankruptcy. Any other view of the matter would destroy the effect of the bankruptcy act entirely. This act is the paramount law for the administration of the estate of insolvents. Its provisions which seek to bring about equality among creditors of the same class cannot be avoided in this way. In re Adams & Hoyt Co. (D. C., Ga.), 21 Am. B. R. 161, 164 Fed. 489.

The word "company" includes at least any unincorporated association or group of individuals whose object and purpose are either wholly or chiefly of the same kind as the object and purpose of a moneyed business or commercial corporation. Private bankers.—Unincorporated companies, engaged in business as private bankers under State statutes, are liable to be adjudicated bankrupts under section 4b of the bankruptcy act. Matter of Sage (D. C., Mo.), 35 Am. B. R. 436, 224 Fed. 525.

The meaning of term "unincorporated company."—In the case of Matter of Associated Trust (D. C., Mass.), 34 Am. B. R. 861, 222 Fed. 1012, the court said: "The words 'unincorporated company' are not found in any Massachusetts statute which has been considered in connection with these organizations. Their meaning in the bankruptcy act is by no means certain. The word 'unincorporated' is clear; the word 'company' in this connection is much less definite. It would seem to imply an association of individuals, not partners, carrying on business under a distinct name, and having common companies include a fire Lloyds Association,¹¹⁴ or a joint-stock association organized under a State law limiting liability to the capital subscribed by the members,¹¹⁵ or a fraternal beneficial association,^{115a} or a business organization in the nature of a real estate trust where the capital is contributed by certificate holders, who select managers of the trust to represent them in transacting the business thereof, as is common in Massachusetts.¹¹⁶

(5) CASES UNDER ACT PRIOR TO AMENDMENT OF 1910.—This section as it existed prior to the amendatory act of 1910, provided that "any corporation engaged principally in manufacturing, trading, printing, publishing, mining or mercantile pursuits" might be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. It was important under the law prior to the amendment of 1910 to determine whether a corporation was or was not engaged principally in the prescribed pursuits. Fine distinctions have been drawn in determining the question as to whether or not a certain business was manufacturing or trading. The amendment of 1910 has made many, if not all, of these cases of little practical importance. The principles declared and the cases cited in support thereof will not materially affect the disposition of cases arising under the amendment of 1910. Cases now pending which arose prior to June 25, 1910, will be decided under the law as it existed and was applied prior to that time. These principles and cases have also some historical value. It may be important, or at least interesting, to know the force and effect of the bankruptcy law during all its stages of existence. In view of the possible application of the principles and cases which arose under the former law to cases now pending which arose prior to the taking effect of the amendment, and the fact that such principles and cases may be of historical interest and importance, it has been deemed advisable to retain such principles and cases in this edition. We have therefore inserted them in much the same way as they appeared in former editions as an appendix to this section.

(6) PRACTICE AND PLEADINGS.—If the petition be against the corporation it must distinctly allege that it comes within one or more of the permitted classes.¹¹⁷ The amendment of 1910, extending the law to practically all business and commercial corporations, has not modified the application of this rule. It should still be clearly alleged in the petition that the corporation is a moneyed, business or a commercial corporation, although this is not essential to the sufficiency of the pleading.¹¹⁸ Under the former law it rights inter se, but having no individual ownership in the joint property, no individual control over the business in which their joint capital is embarked, and no direct individual liability for the company's debts. Its use in connection with the word 'unincorporated' would seem to imply that the organization should have some of the attributes usually found in corporations."

porations which may be adjudged involuntary bankrupt," ante, p. 152. As to form of petition against corporation see Hagan & Alexander Bankr. Forms, p. 43, and Supplementary Form, No. 118, post.

Sufficiency of petition.—A petition which negatives the exceptions set forth in section 4b of the bankruptcy act and alleges that the alleged bankrupt company was engaged in the "general retail merchandise business," is sufficient although it does not allege that the corporation sought to be adjudged a bankrupt was a "moneyed, business, or commercial" corporation. It seems, however, that it is better practice to set forth, in the phraseology of the bankruptcy act, the character of the business of the alleged bankrupt. Sabin v. Blake-McFall Co. (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 35 Am. B. R. 179, 223 Fed. 501.

was held that if the petition did not contain such an allegation it was demurrable and an assertion of the contrary fact in an answer, if not replied to, was conclusive.¹¹⁹ It was also held that an order of adjudication, showing a like omission, could not be impeached collaterally.¹²⁰ Aside from the allegation as to the character of the corporation the petition and the practice are the same as where petitions are filed against individuals. Under the law as amended controversy will seldom arise as to the sufficiency of the petition and of the proof to show that the alleged bankrupt corporation was either a moneyed, business or commercial corporation. There will not be much difficulty in determining the class in which the corporation is to be placed. If any question does arise in respect to this matter, the rule will doubtless be, as it was under the former law, that the burden of proof is upon the petitioners to show that the alleged bankrupt corporation was in the class specified in this section.¹²¹ Where the issue is raised, evidence is not admissible to show that prior to the incorporation of the company its predecessor in interest had sold merchandise.¹²² Pending the determination of the question as to the character of the corporation, a court of bankruptcy may assume jurisdiction, and appoint receivers to take custody of the property.¹²³ Where proceedings are brought against a corporation and it appears that another corporation was under the same management and the property of the two intermingled, a receiver may be appointed for both corporations. But upon it subsequently appearing that the allied corporation was solvent, its assets should be separated, and claims arising from credit given to such corporation should be paid in full from such assets.¹²⁴

c. Effect of bankruptcy of corporations.—(1) IN GENERAL.—A corporation being defined in §. 1 (19) as a person, can apply for and be given a discharge. This seems to have been doubted,¹²⁵ but that corporations may be discharged may now be considered settled. An adjudication in bankruptcy does not of itself dissolve a corporation or terminate its existence.¹²⁶ The reason for their existence being terminated by their insolvency, it is not supposed that many bankrupt corporations will apply.

Effect of demurrer.—A judgment of a district court sustaining a demurrer to a petition upon the ground that the alleged bankrupt was not, on the allegations, "a corporation entitled to the benefits of the bankruptcy act," is a bar to a subsequent petition in another district by creditors who intervened in the first proceeding, presenting the same issue raised by the demurrer to the first petition. Matter of Culin-Pau Contracting Co. (D. (2) LIABILITY OF OFFICERS, DIRECTORS, OR STOCKHOLDERS.—It has been held that the discharge of a corporation does not prevent creditors taking judgment in a State court against the corporation, at least in so far as to enable them to proceed on a stockholder's or director's liability.¹²⁷ This subsection, inserted by the amendatory act of 1903, is thus probably but declaratory of the law. It is, perhaps, a little broader. The "bankruptcy" of a corporation, which must include all of the steps to and including adjudication, is enough. It is possible that the corporation may not seek a discharge. At any rate, the intention of Congress to save to the creditors of corporations all the rights given them against negligent or dishonest officers, directors, or stockholders by the State or territorial or Federal laws is clear. The reason which induced the prohibition on the discharge of corporations found in the law of 1867 exists no longer.¹²⁸ Where the facts warrant a bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to make a call upon stockholders for unpaid stock subscriptions.¹²⁹ As the stockholders' liability to pay such subscriptions is secondary, i. e., conditioned on insufficiency of corporate assets, such want of assets must be established before demand therefor can be enforced against the stockholders.¹³⁰

APPENDIX.

CORPORATIONS SUBJECT TO BANKRUPTCY PRIOR TO AMENDMENT OF 1910.

a. "Engaged principally in."—The section as it existed prior to the amendatory act of 1910 provided that any corporation "engaged principally in" manufacturing, trading, printing, publishing, mining or mercantile pursuits might be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. The phrase "engaged principally in" has already been frequently considered and interpreted in the courts. The weight of authority declared the test to be: In what pursuit is the corporation chiefly engaged? Thus, prior to the amendment of 1903, a mining company, which also conducted a supply store, was not subject to bankruptcy;¹³¹ on the other hand it was held that a mining company chiefly engaged in smelting was.¹³² The purposes of the corporation, as stated

Action to recover.—The discharge in bankruptcy of a corporation is a sufficient excuse for failure to secure judgment and return of execution unsatisfied, preliminary to bringing action against stockholders. Firestone Co. v. Agnew (N. Y. Ct. of App.), 21 Am. B. R. 292, 194 N. Y. 165.

R. 868, 201 Fed. 917), holding that to establish a want of corporate assets for the purpose of levying assessments on unpaid stock of a corporation, it is not necessary to institute plenary suit against the stockholders, but the trustee in bankruptcy of the corporation may file a petition in the bankruptcy court for leave to make an assessment and call upon the unpaid stock of the corporation for the purpose of paying its debts. Compare, Benner v. Billings (Wash. Sup. Ct.), 43 Am. B. R. 576, 181 Pac. 19.

Effect of order of Bankruptcy court.—Where an action by the trustee of a bankrupt corporation to recover the total amount unpaid on a subscription to the stock of the corporation has been authorized by an order of the United States District Court, it is not a valid objection that the complaint does not show on its face that it is necessary to collect the full amount of defendant's stock subscription in order to pay creditors of the corporation. *Jeffery v. in its charter, are not necessarily controlling,¹³³ but where a corporation was organized to manufacture and sell paper made from wood pulp, and had purchased timber and erected mills but had not actually manufactured any paper, it was held subject to involuntary bankruptcy.¹³⁴ Where a corporation is organized and makes preparation for carrying out the objects of its charter, acquiring and equipping itself with the necessary plant and appliances, it thereby engages in that which it is incorporated to do,—whether manufacturing, or mining, or whatever it may be,—within the meaning of the act.¹³⁵ What a corporation is in fact doing is what will determine whether it is engaged in manufacturing, trading or mercantile pursuits;¹³⁶ if it be engaged in several different occupations, some within and some without the specified classes, the debts will be the aggregate of business in the specified classes as compared with that within those classes not specified.¹³⁷

b. Manufacturing corporations.—The word “manufacturing” as used in the act prior to the amendment of 1910 has presumably its popular meaning, that is, the making of products from raw or prepared materials by hand or machinery.¹³⁸ As a general rule, a natural product if only rendered more suitable for use by an artificial process is not a manufactured article.¹³⁹ Some difficulty has arisen in determining whether a given corporation is principally engaged in manufacturing. Precedents under the corporation tax law of the several States, and the internal revenue laws will prove valuable. A laundry company engaged in laundering shirts, collars, etc., for manufacturers, prior to their being sold in the market, is engaged in manu-

A corporation, as apparent owner of a business, which subjects it to bankruptcy, or the unknown equitable owners of the business, which permits the corporation to act as the principal, may be proceeded against by an involuntary petition for adjudication. *Calnan Co. v. What constitutes “manufacture.”—In the case of Butt v. Construction Co. (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 15 Am. B. R. 515, 140 Fed. 840, the court quoted the following language from the case of In re Capital Publishing Co., 3 MacArthur, 405, 40 Am. Rep. 446: “There can be no doubt that the word ‘manufacture’ was used in the statute in the limited sense in which it is commonly understood. The industries to which the dictionaries and the writers on political economy limit this term are where the raw materials or natural substances are wrought by hand, art or machinery into commodities for use; and the examples given are cloths, iron, shoes, cabinet work, glass, cotton and silk goods, etc. This limitation of the term manufacture is to be adopted as the true meaning of the bankruptcy law.” See also In re Niagara Contracting Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 11 Am. B. R. 643, 127 Fed. 782; Friday v. Hall & Kaul Co. (Sup. Ct.), 216 U. S. 449, 23 Am. B. R. 610, 54 L. Ed. 562, where the court said: “Manufacturing has no technical meaning. It is not limited by the means used in making, nor by the kind of product produced.” Compare In re First Nat'l Bank of Belle Fourche (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 18 Am. B. R. 265, 269, 152 Fed. 64, in which the court said: “The word ‘manufacture’ is a generic term of broad significance, advisedly used by Congress to include many species of corporations, and its comprehensive meaning ought no to be whittled away by fine distinctions. Derivatively meaning making with the hand, its ordinary significance is producing a new article of use or ornament by the application of skill and labor to the raw materials of which it is composed.”

Franklin Coal Co.*, 106 Mass. 131), is not a manufacturer; but he who works up standing timber on his own land is (In re Cowles, Fed. Cas. 3,297).

facturing.¹⁴⁰ Although it may be otherwise in respect to a corporation where the company was engaged simply in the doing of laundry work for ordinary customers.¹⁴¹ A shipbuilding corporation is a manufacturing corporation, but a corporation engaged in constructing bridges, wharves and bulkheads and in driving piles for foundations for buildings is not included within the meaning of the word.¹⁴² It has been held, however, in apparent conflict with this proposition, that a corporation principally engaged in constructing concrete arches, bridges and dressing stone is engaged in a manufacturing pursuit and is subject to adjudication in involuntary bankruptcy.¹⁴³ A corporation organized for the purpose of the manufacture and sale of paper made from wood pulp and which owns large tracts of timber land on which it had made various large expenditures in the prosecution of its general plan of manufacturing paper, is subject to involuntary bankruptcy, although no manufacturing had been actually done.¹⁴⁴ A corporation engaged chiefly in manufacturing and selling paper, paper bags, etc., is a manufacturing corporation, although its charter granted it the right to operate water works and electric lights.¹⁴⁵ A corporation which operates a plant for carrying on the process of preserving, packing and marketing salt water fish caught by it is engaged in manufacturing.¹⁴⁶ A corporation engaged in the erection of buildings has been held to be a manufacturing corporation although weighty authority is opposed to this doctrine.¹⁴⁷ A corporation engaged in the building of houses is not a manufacturing corporation within the act.¹⁴⁸ Where the only manufacturing done by a corporation chartered to engaged in the business of roofing buildings and installing steam-heat therein, was such as was incident to a particular job, the corporation is not subject to adjudication as a bankrupt.¹⁴⁹

Construction company.—Where the business actually transacted by a corporation consists of installing heat and power plants, constructing conduits, water works and sewers, buying, selling, and erecting steam engines and occasionally making reports with reference to the proposed construction of electric light and power plants, such corporation is engaged in "manufacturing, trading or mercantile pursuits," within the meaning of § 4-b, as it existed prior to the amendment of 1910. United Surety Co. v. Iowa Mfg. Co. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 24 Am. B. R. 726, 179 Fed. 55.

Where a corporation organized for the purpose of making and selling cement, but which had never exercised its franchise and had never actually engaged in the practice of manufacturing, is not subject to adjudication as an involuntary bankrupt.¹⁵⁰ The business of repairing automobiles is not manufacturing.¹⁵¹ Nor is the business of generating and transmitting electricity.¹⁵² The term "manufacturing" has been held to include cutting of trees into timber.¹⁵³ The words "engaged principally in manufacturing" have reference to the time when the petition was filed and a reasonable time prior thereto and not to some prior time in the history of the corporation.¹⁵⁴ From the various instances here cited it will be noticed that there is not much uniformity in the conclusions of the bankruptcy courts as to what constitutes manufacturing. There seems to be, however, a gradual relinquishment of the restrictive interpretation which was originally applied to the term.

c. Trading corporations.—A corporation engaged principally in trading may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. Under the law of 1867 it was a corporation engaged in "business;" in the law of 1841 it was a corporation "using the trade of merchandise." The meaning of "trader" in England has been well defined for centuries. The cases interpreting the meaning of this term in the English act will be found interesting and often valuable.¹⁵⁵ The term connotes the idea of buying merchandise for the purpose of selling it for gain.¹⁵⁶ Illustrative cases under the law of 1867 will be found in the foot-note.¹⁵⁷ Under the present law, prior to the amendment of 1910, coring and selling ice,¹⁸⁰ a company incorporated to conduct a grain and stock brokerage business,¹⁸¹ have been held either trading corporations or engaged principally in mercantile pursuits. In analogy to cases arising under former bankruptcy acts a corporation, not otherwise engaged in trade or mercantile pursuits, which incidentally purchases or sells property will not be deemed to be subject to involuntary bankruptcy.¹⁸² Nor is a corporation which sells the natural products of its own land a trading corporation.¹⁸³ Public service corporations, such as water, gas or electric companies, are not subject to adjudication as bankrupts.¹⁸⁴ The amendment of 1910 has effectually reconciled these decisions with each other. As the law now stands it will not be important to determine whether a corporation is a trading or manufacturing corporation. If it is engaged in business or commercial enterprises it is amenable to the bankruptcy law.

d. "Printing" and "publishing."—There are few cases construing these words. They were inserted doubtless to meet the decisions under the former law that such corporations were not manufacturing companies. A company publishing ratings of business men for commercial use—the books remaining the property of the company, is not engaged in the printing or publishing business.¹⁸⁵

e. Mercantile pursuits.—The words "mercantile pursuits" as formerly used in this section appear to be by way of emphasis or explanation of the word "trading" which goes before. The word "mercantile" like the word "trading" connotes the buying and selling of commodities.¹⁸⁶ It is possible, however, that it has a broader significance and may have been used to enlarge the meaning of the word "trading."¹⁸⁷

f. Mining corporations.—The word mining was inserted in subd. b of this section by the amendatory act of 1903, to meet the quite uniform holdings that such companies were neither manufacturing nor trading corporations.¹⁸⁸ The meaning of the word is undoubtedly the common one, and a company engaged in taking from the earth any mineral or natural product for the

SECTION FIVE.

PARTNERS.

§ 5. Partners.—a A partnership, during the continuation of the partnership business, or after its dissolution and before the final settlement thereof, may be adjudged a bankrupt.

b The creditors of the partnership shall appoint the trustee: in other respects so far as possible the estate shall be administered as herein provided for other estates.

c The court of bankruptcy which has jurisdiction of one of the partners may have jurisdiction of all the partners and of the administration of the partnership and individual property.

d The trustee shall keep separate accounts of the partnership property and of the property belonging to the individual partners.

e The expenses shall be paid from the partnership property and the individual property in such proportions as the court shall determine.

f The net proceeds of the partnership property shall be appropriated to the payment of the partnership debts, and the net proceeds of the individual estate of each partner to the payment of his individual debts. Should any surplus remain of the property of any partner after paying his individual debts, such surplus shall be added to the partnership assets and be applied to the payment of the partnership debts. Should any surplus of the partnership property remain after paying the partnership debts, such surplus shall be added to the assets of the individual partners in the proportion of their respective interests in the partnership.

g The court may permit the proof of the claim of the partnership estate against the individual estates, and vice versa, and may marshal the assets of the partnership estate and individual estates so as to prevent preferences and secure the equitable distribution of the property of the several estates.

h In the event of one or more but not all of the members of a partnership being adjudged bankrupt, the partnership property shall not be administered in bankruptcy, unless by consent of the partner or partners not adjudged bankrupt; but such partner or partners not adjudged bankrupt shall settle the partnership business as expeditiously as its nature will permit, and account for the interest of the partner or partners adjudged bankrupt.

I. BANKRUPT PARTNERSHIP.

a. Historical and general.—General Order VIII, relating to proceedings in partnership cases, should be read in connection with this section.¹ All bankruptcy laws have specific provisions regulating the adjudication of partnerships and the interrelation of the debts and assets of the partnership and its members. The English statute here resembles our present and past laws; the interpretation of the two statutes is not, however, always identical. Section 36 of our law of 1867 is strikingly similar to § 14 of its predecessor of 1841. The present section expresses in fewer words all that those sections did, and something more. The provisions of the Canadian act are similar to those of our own act, although scattered through several sections.

1. See General Orders in Bankruptcy, VIII, post.

b. What constitutes a partnership.—(1) DEFINITION.—The term “partnership” is not specifically defined in this act. By § 1 (19) it is included in the meaning of the term “person” and it is also provided in § 1 (6) that “corporations” include “limited or other partnership associations organized under laws making the capital subscribed alone responsible for the debts of the association.”

(2) PARTNERSHIPS AFFECTED BY ACT.—The section under discussion applies only to general partnerships. It does not extend to partnerships by estoppel but such as are partnerships as to creditors only.² The existence of a partnership must be shown to be an actual status, valid as against creditors, and not a status created by estoppel against a former partner.³ Under all the cases it is necessary in order to proceed to adjudication that an actual partnership be shown.⁴ The provisions of the section relate to a partnership between the parties where there may be both joint and individual assets.⁵ The mere “holding out” of a person to be a partner is not of itself sufficient to

C., Pa.), 12 Am. B. R. 453, 130 Fed. 475; In re Alden (Ref., Ohio), 16 Am. B. R. 362. See Am. Bankr. Dig. § 134.

A partnership is a “person” under the definition in § 1 (19) and may be adjudged a bankrupt irrespective of any adjudication against the individual members. Mills v. J. H. Fisher & Co. (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 237, 159 Fed. 897.

3. Status at time of filing petition.—In the case of In re Pinson (D. C., Ala.), 24 Am. B. R. 804, 180 Fed. 787, the court said: “The existence of a partnership within the meaning of this section is its actual status, as distinguished from a status created by estoppel against a former partner. If it has been dissolved by the partners inter sese before the filing of the petition, it is not thereafter an existing partnership, and the proceedings in bankruptcy cannot be said to have been instituted ‘during the continuation of the partnership business,’ nor can debts created thereafter by the continuing partner be considered partnership debts. The jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court to adjudicate and administer attaches only upon the showing of the actually existing partnership, constituting a legal entity at the time of the filing of the petition.”

Rule in Montana.—The rule of law that where there is no partnership in fact, there can be none as to third persons, unless the party sought to be held as a partner has, by his acts, put himself in such a position that he is estopped from denying that he is a partner, obtains in the State of Montana. Lott v. Young (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 6 Am. B. R. 436, 109 Fed. 798.

R. 436, 109 Fed. 798; Buffalo Milling Co. v. Lewisburg Dairy Co. (D. C., Pa.), 20 Am. B. R. 279, 159 Fed. 319.

An association formed for the purpose of dealing in real estate, taking title thereto in the name of a trustee under a trust deed wherein the members agreed to share in the profits and losses, is a partnership. Matter of Alden (Ref., Ohio), 16 Am. B. R. 362. Where two persons intending to form a corporation, which was never organized, associate themselves in a mercantile business, one contributing goods and the other cash, which was deposited in bank and used for the business, there is a partnership in fact, which may be adjudicated bankrupt. Manson v. Williams (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 18 Am. B. R. 674, 153 Fed. 525, affg. 17 Am. B. R. 826, 148 Fed. 305, affd. 213 U. S. 453, 22 Am. B. R. 22, 53 L. Ed. 869.

Proof of existence of partnership.—To justify the adjudication of a member of a firm as a partner there must be evidence from which the court may find as a fact that such member was a partner; it is insufficient that to various creditors such member had held himself out as a partner, because while an estoppel may give rights to those who were misled, in order to give rights to all creditors he must be in fact a partner. Matter of Kaplan (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 37 Am. B. R. 104, 234 Fed. 866.

bring the alleged partnership within the act.⁶ With this limitation, however, the State decisions on partnership law seem controlling. An unincorporated company doing business as a private bank under a State law giving it some of the privileges of a corporation is, nevertheless, a partnership.⁷ The fact that one person, having the title to real estate in his own name, pays some portion of the income thereof to another person does not establish that they are partners.⁸ A partnership which has ceased to exist, but has remaining assets and debts, is considered as subsisting as to its creditors until its property is subjected to the satisfaction of their debts.⁹

c. The entity doctrine.—(1) IN GENERAL.—A partnership now is something other than that under the law of 1867. There the words were, "two or more persons who are partners in trade." Now it is "a partnership" that "may be adjudged a bankrupt." This phrasing, coupled with other clauses, has led to the doctrine that a partnership is in bankruptcy a legal entity¹⁰—a joint relation where the identity of the members has been lost—and that, therefore, the individuals and the partnership are entities separate and distinct from each other.¹¹

(2) APPLICATION OF DOCTRINE.—A partnership being a distinct entity, it owns its property and owes its debts apart from the individual property of its members which it does not own, and apart from the individual debts of its members which it does not owe. It may be adjudged bankrupt, although the partners who compose it are not so adjudicated.¹² In other words, the firm

A partnership is a distinct entity, a "person" under § 1(19). Mills v. Fisher & Co. (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 237, 239, 159 Fed. 897.

The adjudication of a partnership draws to the court for administration the individual estate of the partners, though as individuals they have not been adjudicated. Matter of Latimer (D. C., Pa.), 23 Am. B. R. 388, 174 Fed. 824; In re Stokes (D. C., Pa.), 6 Am. B. R. 262, 106 Fed. 312; Compare Matter of Samuels & Lesser (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 32 Am. B. must petition or be petitioned against; if the latter, the firm, or a member of it acting within the scope of the partnership, must have committed the act of bankruptcy; and, if adjudication follows, the firm, so nomine, must be adjudicated.¹³ Under this principle a partnership as an entity may be adjudged to be a bankrupt, irrespective of any adjudication against the individual members.¹⁴

(3) EFFECT OF DOCTRINE ON RIGHTS OF PARTNERS AND CREDITORS.—This doctrine is essentially different from that of the English law, where even if the firm be proceeded against, the adjudication must be against the partners individually.¹⁵ Our law and practice, prior to the present statute, were to the same effect. This new doctrine of entity, however, has already led to some decisions of far-reaching importance, and should be kept continually in mind by the student or practitioner who would understand one of the most confusing branches of the law of bankruptcy.¹⁶ The entity doctrine permits of the adjudication in bankruptcy of a partnership one of the members of which is insane,¹⁷ but will not justify an adjudication where some of the alleged members deny the existence and composition of the partnership.¹⁸

Opposition to entity doctrine.—In the case of In re Forbes (D. C., Mass.), 11 Am. B. R. 787, 128 Fed. 137, "For some purposes a partnership has been treated as an entity apart from the partners; for other purposes it has been treated as a congeries to partners. Some courts have suggested that the Act of 1898 has adopted for bankruptcy the theory of an entity separate from the partners. Yet this treatment of a partnership is irreconcilable with other provisions of the statute. Section 5-h of the act provides that the partnership property (except in case of consent) shall not be administered in bankruptcy unless all the partners are adjudged bankrupt. This is in effect a provision that the partnership shall not be made bankrupt, except by the adjudication of all its partners. Adjudication without accompanying distribution of the bankrupt estate would be worse than a vain form, for it would confuse inextricably questions of preference, lien, attachment and the like. . . . Section 5-b contemplates that the adjudication under a joint petition shall be both joint and several. If the adjudication were joint only, there would be no object in providing that the joint creditors alone shall elect the trustee. Still again, section 5-c gives to the court which has jurisdiction of one partner 'jurisdiction of all the partners' and says nothing about jurisdiction of the partnership as an entity. Read as a whole, Form No. 2 agrees with section 5-h, and not with the theory of entity. It is in terms the petition of individuals. It sets out that they owe debts which they cannot pay and that they desire the benefits of the bankrupt act." And see Abbott v. Anderson, 265 Ill 285, 33 Am. B. R. 383, 106 N. E. 782.

13. Where there is no adjudication against the firm, assets may not be administered by the bankruptcy court, if there be one member not adjudicated, unless he consent. In such cases the unadjudicated partner has the right to wind up the firm, paying over only the share of the bankrupt partner to his trustee. Mills v. Fisher & Co. (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 237, 159 Fed. 897.

R. 148, 184 Fed. 224, in which case the court said: "The difference in this regard between section 5 of the present bankruptcy act on the one hand, and section 14 of the act of 1841, and section 36 of the act of 1867 on the other, is enough to show that Congress intended by the present act to treat partnerships as entities, distinct from their members, for the purpose at least of permitting partnerships to be adjudicated bankrupts either through voluntary or involuntary proceedings." Adjudication of individual as partner.—When no petition in bankruptcy has been filed against him, an individual who asserts under oath that he is not a partner cannot

This doctrine prevents, in considering the value of the partnership property, the including of the homestead of one of the partners in the assets.¹⁹ The recognition and application of this doctrine does not modify in any way the established rule, fixing the substantive rights of creditors, irrespective of the partnership and of its individual members.²⁰ The full force and application of the doctrine is in connection with the adjudication of the partnership, separate and distinct from the adjudication of the several partners.²¹ The rule seems firmly established that the partnership as a distinct entity may be adjudicated a bankrupt, without a proceeding being prosecuted against the other members of the partnership, and on the other hand proceedings may be instituted against the individual members of the partnership without in any way involving the partnership itself.²²

d. Receivership as act of bankruptcy.—Under the original law, following the analogy of the corporation cases, it was held that the consent to or the be summarily adjudicated a partner in an inquiry before a referee in bankruptcy to which he does not consent. Matter of Samuels and Lesser (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 32 Am. B. R. 436, 215 Fed. 845, revg. 30 Am. B. R. 293, 207 Fed. 195.

19. In re McMurray (D. C., Tex.), 15 Am. B. R. 427, 142 Fed. 853. This doctrine has been carried even so far as to require the payment of the statutory fees for partnerships and each of the individuals in In re Barden (D. C., N. C.), 4 Am. B. R. 31, 101 Fed. 553, and In re Farley (D. C., Va.), 8 Am. B. R. 266, 115 Fed. 359, though the soundness of these rulings has been frequently challenged.

* Notwithstanding the entity doctrine "the fact remains as true as ever that partnership debts are debts of members of the firm, and that the individual liability of the members is not collateral like that of a surety, but primary and direct, whatever privities there may be in the marshalling of assets." Mr. Justice Holmes in Francis v. McNeal, 228 U. S. 695, 30 Am. B. R. 244, 57 L. Ed. 1029, affg. 26 Am. B. R. 555, 186 Fed. 481, 108 C. C. A. 459.

C., 8th Cir.), 19 Am. B. R. 577, 167 Fed. 363, in which case the court said: "The uniform current of authority is that under this act a partnership is a distinct entity, separate from the individuals who compose it; that it owns its property and owes its debts which are respectively separate and distinct from the individual property and the individual debts of its partners, and that the adjudication of the partnership a bankrupt apart from or in addition to the adjudication of its partners bankrupts is indispensable to the jurisdiction of the court of bankruptcy to administer the partnership property." See Fidelity Trust Co. v. Gaskell (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 28 Am. B. R. 4, 195 Fed. 865, in which the court said: "A partnership is a distinct entity, a person separate from the partners who compose it and from all other partnerships. It owns its property apart from the individual property of its members and apart from the property of every other partnership of which any of its members happen to be members and it owes its debts apart from the individual debts of its members, and from the debts of other partnerships of which any of its members are members. . . . A receiver or trustee of a partnership adjudged a bankrupt is not the receiver or trustee of the property of another unadjudicated partnership in which the members of the bankrupt partnership were also members, and he has no more right to seize or to administer such property than he has to take and distribute the property of any other stranger."

appointment of receivers of a partnership was not an act of bankruptcy.²³ This is no longer true. Section 3-a (4), as amended, means that the appointment of a receiver of an insolvent partnership is an act of bankruptcy.²⁴

II. WHEN PARTNERSHIP MAY BE ADJUDGED BANKRUPT.

a. Statutory provision.—The statute provides that: "A partnership during the continuation of the partnership business or after its dissolution and before the final settlement thereof may be adjudged a bankrupt." During the continuation of the partnership business the partnership may be adjudged bankrupt. The limitation of the filing of petitions by or against a partnership found in the words "after the dissolution and before the final settlement thereof," is of little importance. It has been held that there can be no final settlement until all the debts are paid.²⁵ The partnership affairs are unsettled within the meaning of this provision so long as partnership debts are left unpaid.²⁶ It is doubtless true that the existence of assets is not essential to a partnership adjudication. It has been questioned whether a partner can in an individual proceeding, secure a discharge that will be effective against his partnership liability.²⁷ If this be so, it may be questioned whether either the bankrupt or his creditors would be beneficially affected by the adjudication of a partnership which has no assets. The only benefit to accrue to the creditors of the firm would be the appointment of a trustee who, in the exercise of the powers conferred upon him, might discover assets of the firm which had not been disclosed.²⁸ In other words, the limitation stated above may, in actual practice, where the partnership has no assets, amount to an absurdity. In other respects the limitation is declaratory of the law. The mere dissolution of a copartnership does not destroy its existence as to its creditors. It was otherwise under the law of 1867.²⁹ But even after dissolution a partnership may not be adjudicated a bankrupt so long as there is a solvent

Wies* (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 7 Am. B. R. 584, 112 Fed. 962, seems to imply that lapse of time is equivalent to a settlement. Compare Holmes v. Baker & Hamilton (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 252, 160 Fed. 922.

26. Settlement of affairs.—In the case of In re Pinson (D. C., Ala.), 24 Am. B. R. 804, 180 Fed. 787, the court said: "The act also provides for the adjudication of a partnership so long as its affairs are unsettled. If there are outstanding firm debts at the time of the filing of the petition in a requisite amount, a proper case is made for adjudication, the other elements being present, though the partnership has long ceased to do business; otherwise not. The partnership affairs are unsettled within the meaning of this section so long as partnership debts are left unpaid. Debts which are binding upon the partners only by estoppel as to creditors without notice of dissolution are not firm debts. The administration might be of no avail if there were no assets, partnership or individual, for distribution; but the jurisdiction of the court to adjudicate would exist nevertheless, and it would be properly exercised for the purpose of affording opportunity to the firm creditors through the appointment of a trustee to discover such assets."

After the sale by a partner in good faith and for a valuable consideration of his interest in the firm to his copartner, and the consequent dissolution of the firm, the only remedy of the creditors is to proceed in some form of action against the former partners as individuals, or perhaps within the four months provided by the Bankruptcy Act to proceed against the firm, setting up the transfer as one in fraud of their rights, etc. Matter of Fackelman (D. member.³⁰ The individual assets of members of a firm may be administered by the court so far as may be necessary to settle the partnership affairs, although such members are not individually declared to be bankrupt.³¹

b. Acts of bankruptcy by a partnership.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The general rule that whatever a partner does within the scope of the partnership binds the other partners applies to the commission of acts of bankruptcy. Since a partnership is now an entity, petitions which, under the previous law, would not confer jurisdiction because the act of bankruptcy was not committed by all the partners, are now sufficient.³²

(2) COMMISSION OF ACT OF BANKRUPTCY BY ONE PARTNER.—Generally speaking, the commission of an act of bankruptcy as to the partnership property by either partner amounts to an act of bankruptcy by the firm.³³ An act of bankruptcy by a single partner in respect to partnership property, within the legitimate scope of his authority, will bind the partnership and warrant an adjudication; his act must be such as to be imputed to the partnership.³⁴ For instance a voluntary assignment of all the assets of a firm, by one of the partners, constitutes an act of bankruptcy for which the firm may be adjudged a bankrupt, for the reason that it affected the partnership business and disposed of its assets.³⁵ If the act pertains to individual property with the intent to hinder, delay or defraud individual creditors, it does not bind the partnership.³⁶ It has been held that even the fifth act of bankruptcy, when com-

35. Disposition of firm assets by one partner.—In the case of Yungbluth v. Slipper (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 26 Am. B. R. 265, 185 Fed. 773, the court said: "The only question which requires any extended discussion is presented by the contention that the appellant could not be adjudged a bankrupt on account of the individual act of bankruptcy of his copartner Schafer made the assignment for creditors, and there is no proof that the appellant assented to it. There can be no doubt that Schafer's act was an act of bankruptcy for which the partnership was properly adjudged bankrupt, for it was an act which affected the partnership business and disposed of the partnership assets. In re Meyer (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 3 Am. B. R. 559, 98 Fed. 976, 39 C. C. A. 368; In re Kersten (D. C., Wis.), 6 Am. B. R. 516, 110 Fed. 929; In re Borelli (D. C., Ct.), 16 Am. B. R. 115, 142 Fed. 296. But the proceeding in this case was not only against the partnership, but was also against each individual member. In some of the decisions it has been said broadly that one partner may not be adjudged bankrupt for the act of his copartner, and undoubtedly the statement is true as to certain acts of individual partners. Thus it has been held that neither a firm nor the other partners may be adjudged bankrupt for the act of a partner in preferring out of his individual estate one of his own or the firm's creditors. Mills v. J. H. Fisher & Co. (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 237, 159 Fed. 897, 87 C. C. A. 77, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 656. But we think the true doctrine is that, if the act of the individual partner is one for which the partnership itself may be adjudged bankrupt, the other members of the firm may also be adjudged bankrupt unless they can show in defense that the property of the firm, together with that of all the partners applicable to the payment of the partnership debts, is sufficient to pay the same."

mitted by one partner, binds the copartnership;³⁷ on the other hand, the embezzlement of the funds of the partnership by an absconding partner is not an act of bankruptcy.³⁸ If a partner out of his individual estate prefers one of his own or one of the firm creditors, it is not an act of bankruptcy for which the firm may be adjudged bankrupt.³⁹ Where the administrator of a deceased partner applies for the appointment of a receiver to wind up the partnership, upon the surviving partner announcing his intention of not exercising his statutory right to take the interest of his deceased partner at the appraised value, such surviving partner does not commit an act of bankruptcy by joining in the application for the receiver.⁴⁰

(3) WHAT CONSTITUTE ACTS OF BANKRUPTCY.—If the insolvency of the partnership was one of the substantial reasons for the appointment of a receiver the partnership may be adjudicated a bankrupt.⁴¹ A general assignment by a partnership and each of the individual members thereof is an act of bankruptcy by the partnership and the partners.⁴² The filing of a petition in bankruptcy by one partner against his copartnership is not an act of bankruptcy on the part of the partnership.⁴³ Where an execution was levied after the dissolution of a partnership, the failure to discharge it is an act of bankruptcy by all the members of the firm, for which it and all the partners may be adjudged bankrupt.⁴⁴

c. Insolvency.—In determining the question of insolvency the individual property of the partners should be considered.⁴⁵ Where the assets of a partnership, together with the individual properties of each partner, exceeds their liabilities, the partnership is not insolvent.⁴⁶ It has been well said that this principle is at variance with the universal doctrine that under the

Only property of partnership to be considered.—The case of In re McMurtrey v. Smith (D. C., Tex.), 15 Am. B. R. 427, 142 Fed. 853, is analogous to the case last cited. It was there held that upon the question of the insolvency of a partnership, sought to be adjudged bankrupt, the firm and its individual members are strangers to each other, and a homestead, the individual property of one partner, may not be counted as part of the partnership property. In the case of In re Morgan & Williams (D. C., Ga.), 25 Am. B. R. 861, 184 Fed. 938, the court said: "Assuming the entity doctrine to prevail under the more recent decisions of the courts, as contended by counsel for petitioning creditors, and that the firm's assets and liabilities would be the test of solvency or insolvency as against the firm, and that notwithstanding the fact that the individuals composing the firm are proceeded against also, still it must appear, to justify an adjudication in bankruptcy, that the real indebtedness on the part of the alleged bankrupt firm to the petitioning creditor or creditors exceeds the aggregate, at a fair valuation, of the alleged bankrupt firm's property."

48. Insolvency of partnership and of partners.—In the case of Francis v. McNeal (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 26 Am. B. R. 555, 186 Fed. 481, affd. 228 U. S. 695, 30 Am. B. R. 240, 57 L. Ed. 1029, the court cited the authorities and said: "A partnership cannot be adjudged a bankrupt, in an involuntary proceeding, unless it has committed an act of bankruptcy. If the act charged be one involving insolvency, since every partner is liable in solido for all the partnership debts, the adjudication against the partnership must be based on allegations and proofs that the assets of its members, in excess of their individual debts, plus the assets of the partnership, are insufficient to pay the partnership debts. Otherwise there is no partnership insolvency, notwithstanding the entity doctrine. In re Blair (D. C., N. Y.), 3 Am. B. R. 588, 99 Fed. 76; Vaccaro Security Bank (C. C. A.,

6th Cir.), 4 Am. B. R. 474, 103 Fed. 436, 43 C. C. A. 279; Davis v. Stevens (D. C., S. D.), 4 Am. B. R. 763, 104 Fed. 235; In re Forbes (D. C., Mass.), 11 Am. B. That doctrine furnishes a direct proceeding against the partnership as a legal entity, but it does not authorize an adjudication of bankruptcy against a partnership, where the act of bankruptcy charged is one involving insolvency, unless as above stated, it is shown that there is an insufficiency of partnership and individual assets to pay the partnership debts. If a partnership is insolvent, in the sense above explained, all the assets of the partnership and its members are needed for the proper winding up of the partnership affairs."

In the case of Tumlin v. Bryan (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 21 Am. B. R. 319, 165 Fed. 166, 91 C. C. A. 200, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 960, the court said: "If the component parts of the firm may be made to pay the firm's debts, the suit lacks reason and substance, and it cannot be held that the defendant has obtained a greater percentage of his debts than other creditors of the same class. If the members of the firm are solvent, all creditors may be paid in full. If the individual members of the partnership are not shown to be insolvent at the date of the payments, the preference is not voidable." This case pertained to the recovery of a preference, but the reasoning is applicable to the question of insolvency where an act of bankruptcy is alleged. See also In re Perlheffer v. Shatz (D. is not bankrupt so long as one of the members who compose it is individually solvent.⁴⁹

d. Death, insanity, or infancy of a partner.— (1) DEATH OF PARTNER.— The estate of a deceased debtor cannot in this country be adjudged a bankrupt.⁵⁰ It follows that there can be no partnership adjudication against a firm, one member of which is dead.● The surviving partner can still be adjudged either a voluntary or an involuntary bankrupt as an individual and as survivor.⁵² The court of bankruptcy may thereby obtain jurisdiction of the partnership estate, or by consent, if in the hands of an administrator;⁵³ and the estate of the deceased partner is in any event still liable to pay the firm debts.⁵⁴ A trustee in bankruptcy of a surviving partner may not close the affairs of the partnership and proceed as though the surviving partner was not a bankrupt; all that the trustee can do is to take the remaining interest of the bankrupt partner after the firm obligations have been paid.⁵⁵ This doctrine of the lack of jurisdiction of the court of bankruptcy to adjudicate as to the bankruptcy of a partnership after the death of one partner is not recognized or upheld by some of the later cases. There is an apparent conflict of authority upon this question.⁵⁶ The only difficulty attending upon adjudication in such a case is the consequent interference with the administration of the probate court of the estate of the deceased partner. In the absence of express statutory authority it would seem more consistent to leave the creditors to their remedy in the probate court. The apparent lack of jurisdiction in the bankruptcy court to adjudicate the bankruptcy of a partnership where one of the members is dead is unfortunate, but it leads to confusion rather than denial of justice. The rights of creditors, in all ordinary cases, are fully conserved even though the administration of assets may be in two courts. The death of a partner after adjudication does not affect the proceeding.⁵⁷

(2) INSANITY OF PARTNER.— The effect of insanity of the alleged bankrupt on the jurisdiction of the court has already been noted.⁵⁸ Conceding that an insane person may not be adjudicated a bankrupt it has been held, nevertheless, that a partnership of which he was or is a member may be so adjucated, and the firm property applied to the payment of the firm debts.⁵⁹ There is the same difficulty with this question as there is with that relating to the effect of the death of one of the partners upon the jurisdiction of the court. The statute does not apparently authorize the intervention of committees in involuntary proceedings against the lunatics they represent, so that where such committees have been appointed in proceedings to determine judicially the incompetency of a person, the jurisdiction of the State court would seem to supersede that of a court of bankruptcy and thus preclude the administration of the lunatic's estate in a proceeding instituted to adjudicate the bankruptcy of a partnership of which he was a member.

(3) INFANCY OF PARTNER.—If one of the partners is an infant the partnership itself may be adjudicated bankrupt and so may the individual members thereof who are of age, or the petition will be dismissed as to the partner who is an infant.⁶⁰

(4) EXEMPTION OF PARTNER.—A partnership and some of its members may be adjudicated involuntary bankrupts, although the other members belong to the exempt classes.⁶¹

III. PRACTICE BEFORE ADJUDICATION.

a. In general.—If all the partners petition voluntarily, the proceeding prior to adjudication is identical with an individual petition. The owing of debts,⁶² and the facts as to residence, domicile, or principal place of business,⁶³ must at least appear on the face of the petition to confer jurisdiction. Conversely, if the petition be involuntary, the facts as to the partners not being included in either of the excepted classes and owing at least $1,000,⁶⁴ as to the provable debts of the petitioners and the number of the creditors,⁶⁵ as to the commission of an act of bankruptcy within four months,⁶⁶ and, in cases where insolvency is necessary to the act, that it existed at the time of its commission and also at the time of the filing⁶⁷ must clearly appear or the court will not acquire jurisdiction. It must also appear affirmatively that both the partnership as an entity and the individuals composing it were and are insolvent at the times mentioned.⁶⁸ A petition to have a partnership adjudicated bankrupt nunc pro tunc, for the purpose of which is to overturn transactions already closed, will usually be refused.⁶⁹ If an issue is raised as to the partnership in an involuntary proceeding, the burden is on the petitioners to show that there was a partnership.⁷⁰

b. Petition by partners where all do not join.—(1) IN GENERAL.—It has been held, following the entity doctrine, that separate petitions must be filed by the firm and by the individuals.⁷¹ The better opinion is, however, to the contrary, viz., that but one petition need be filed.⁷² Where some but not all the partners file a voluntary petition the proceeding is voluntary as to the petitioning partners, but involuntary as to the nonjoining partners who, upon notification, do not join therein.⁷³ In such a case it is not necessary to allege or prove as to non-consenting partners the commission of an act of bankruptcy, or, in fact, any of the jurisdictional facts peculiar to involuntary applications;⁷⁴ but such partner may set up the defense of solvency, and upon that issue he is entitled to trial by jury.⁷⁵

(2) RIGHTS OF NON-JOINING PARTNER.—Under General Order VIII, the non-joining or absentee partner is entitled to the same notice as if petitioned against, and to answer to the petition and to allege and prove any of the facts which would be pertinent to a proceeding against the partnership.⁷⁶ A convenient form for notice to the non-consenting partners is found in the case of In re Murray.⁷⁷ This notice, of course, may be given by publication;⁷⁸ but such notice is so far jurisdictional that the consent of non-joining partners after adjudication of the bankruptcy of the firm will not render it valid.⁷⁹ It seems that immediately the partnership adjudication is granted, the proceeding becomes strictly voluntary.⁸⁰ It may be doubted whether the court has jurisdiction to adjudge the non-consenting insolvent partner a bankrupt individually unless the prayer of the petition asks individual adjudication.⁸¹

Petition by continuing partner.—Where B., who had purchased the interest of his copartner E., filed a petition in bankruptcy signed B. & E. by B., the proceeding should be regarded as having been instituted by B., doing business as B. & E. Matter of Baker & Edwards (D. 76. Notice to non-joining partner.—It seems that notice to an undisclosed partner is not necessary. In re Harris (D. C., Ohio), 4 Am. B. R. 132, 108 Fed. 517. A petition to adjudge a partnership a voluntary bankrupt which is made by some of the partners without notice to the non-joining partner is irregular and will not warrant the adjudication of the firm as bankrupts; such a defect is not cured by subsequent unverified consent signed by the attorneys for the non-joining partners. In re Altman (D. C., N. Y.), 2 Am. B. R. 407, 95 Fed. 263; Matter of City Contracting & Bldg. Co. (D. C., Hawaii), 29 Am. B. R. 171; Armstrong v. Fisher (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 34 Am. B. R. 701, 224 Fed. 97.

Rights of objecting partner.—In the case of In re Junck v. Balthazard (D. C., Wis.), 22 Am. B. R. 289, 169 Fed. 481, the court said: "It seems to me that the following conclusions are sustained by fair construction of the Bankrupt Act of 1898. First, that the objecting partner cannot be adjudicated against his will. Second that such non-consenting partner does not hold a veto on the jurisdiction of the court over the partnership, as an entity. If this concession were made, the objecting partner but, under principles discussed later in this section, that would seem immaterial, the partnership adjudication drawing to itself of necessity the administration of the individual estates as well. The rule is different where the non-consenting partner proves to be solvent. Where the same persons are members of distinct firms, it was held under the former law that they could not petition together.⁸² The entity doctrine seems to intensify rather than weaken this ruling. An alleged partner is not entitled to a jury trial of the question as to whether he was a partner at the time the petition was filed.⁸³ Where the petitioners are members of different partnerships with others who do not join, adjudication will undoubtedly be refused, but with leave to refile in the form of separate petitions.⁸⁴ It has been held that a partner may file a petition praying for adjudication against his partnership, either on the sole ground of the insolvency of the partnership and all its partners or on the sole ground that the partnership has, through one or more of the non-joining partners, committed an act of bankruptcy.⁸⁵

(3) INTERVENTION BY CREDITORS.—While the proceeding as to the non-joining partner may be involuntary, it is not involuntary so as to enable the creditor to intervene to resist the adjudication of the partnership.⁸⁶

c. Form of petition.—Form No. 2 should not be relied on too implicitly. The prayer of the petition should at least ask for an adjudication of the individuals as well as of the firm.⁸⁷ Careful practice also seems to commight bar the way to any discharge from partnership debts, and thus neutralize section 4-a of the act, which expressly confers 'the benefits of this act,' on any person who owes debts. Third, that the inherent right of the solvent partner to close up the affairs of the firm must be recognized by the court of bankruptcy. This right was not conferred by the bankruptcy act, neither can it be abridged or taken away by it. Balthazard, the surviving partner, might defeat the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court in two ways: First, by proving the solvency of the firm; Second, by showing himself solvent, and agreeing to take upon himself the settlement of the partnership business, reporting to the court, according to the equitable rule of residuum, all assets remaining to be distributed by the court among the partnership creditors."

1898 and General Order 8, that this petition is so far involuntary as to permit a creditor of the firm to intervene in order to resist adjudication. See In re Murray (D. C., Iowa), 3 Am. B. R. 601, 96 Fed. 600. As to the petitioner these proceedings are purely voluntary. As to him a creditor has no more right to intervene than in the case of any other voluntary petition. As to the non-joining partner, the proceedings are in some sense involuntary. As to intervention by creditors it is most convenient and most consistent with justice and the general scheme of the act, to hold that the right 'to make all defenses which any debtor proceeded against has a right to make,' is confined to the non-joining partner. If he makes any objection then, so far as adjudication is concerned, the petition is to be treated generally as if it were altogether voluntary. Had this been an ordinary voluntary petition by both partners the creditor could not have intervened to contest the adjudication. If partners are willing to be adjudicated bankrupt, whether on the petition of one or on that of all of them, they are to have their way." In the case of In re Junck v. Balthazard (D. C., Wis.), 22 Am. B. R. 289, 169 Fed. 481, the court said: "In the case of the non-consenting partner, the procedure as to him, is the same as in an involuntary case; but as to creditors, the petition is voluntary, and there is no room for the issue which the creditor attempts to raise by his intervention, and his answer may be stricken from the files."

Petition to follow official form; amend-mand that words indicating that both the partners and the individuals owe debts that they cannot pay in full, and offering to surrender both firm and individual properties, be inserted. It may be that the mere statement that debts are owed is sufficient to cover the jurisdictional requirement that partnerships cannot be adjudged bankrupt after the final settlement thereof, but it is better to allege that there has been no such settlement in very words; it has been held insufficient to state that the "copartners are insolvent."⁸⁸ If an act of bankruptcy is alleged in a petition against a partnership, consisting of a preferential transfer and a transfer with intent to hinder and delay creditors, the petition is sufficient though it neither alleges the insolvency of the individual partners, nor that the solvent partners, if any, consent to the adjudication.⁸⁹ If one partner lives in another jurisdiction, that fact should be stated. If a partner refuses to join, that fact should also be stated, and the prayer of the petition should include a request for the issue of the usual subpoena to him as if to an alleged bankrupt. The schedules should be complete,⁹⁰ both for the firm and for each partner. Where the petition is against a copartnership even greater care should be used. Here Form No. 3 is not reliable other than by way of suggestion; it does not contain all the jurisdictional allegations.⁹¹

a. In general.—A partnership may be adjudicated bankrupt irrespective of any adjudication as to the individual partners.⁹² The adjudication may be in the name of an ostensible partner, where it appears that such name is ment.—Where an adjudication is desired of petitioning partners as individuals as well as the firm, official Form No. 2 should not be literally followed, but there should be inserted in the prayer of the petition a request for an adjudication of the petitioning partners as well as of the firm. The omission of such an allegation may be supplied by amendment. Matter of Lenoir-Cross & Co. (D. C., Tenn.), 35 Am. B. R. 774, 226 Fed. 227.

Involuntary proceedings; petition.—Where a partnership has been dissolved and one partner has transferred his interest in the firm to his copartner, a petition in involuntary bankruptcy against the firm and the members thereof may be amended by striking out the firm and the partner so that an adjudication may be had against the copartner, although the partner opposes the amendment because he has claims against the copartner which came into existence after the date of the petition. Matter of Young (D. C., Mass.), 35 Am. B. R. 200, 223 Fed. 659.

⁸⁸ Matter of Wing Yick Co. (D. C., Hawaii), 13 Am. B. R. 757, 2 U. S., D. C., Hawaii 259.

Petition not to allege act of bankruptcy.—Where a petition for voluntary bankruptcy is filed by one partner and opposed by another partner it is not required to allege that the firm had committed an act of bankruptcy. The better rule seems to be that in such case the ordinary averment that the firm has not sufficient assets to pay its obligations and is willing to submit its property for distribution, is sufficient, and the filing of such a petition by one of the partners is of itself considered the equivalent to an act of bankruptcy. In re Junck v. Balt-hazard (D. C., Wis.), 22 Am. B. R. 289, 169 Fed. 481.

Schedules by non-joining partner.—Upon an adjudication of bankruptcy against a firm the non-joining partner, although not liable to adjudication where there is no allegation of an act of bankruptcy committed by him individually, may be required to file a schedule of his debts and an inventory of his property, in accordance with the eighth General Order. Matter of Lenoir-Cross & Co. (D. C., Tenn.), 35 Am. B. R. 774, 226 Fed. 227.

When individual cannot be summarily adjudicated liable as partner.—A court of bankruptcy in proceedings against a partnership has no jurisdiction to administer upon the that under which the partnership does business.⁹³ The entity doctrine requires that the adjudication, while substantially as prescribed by Form No. 12, should declare, after modifying its recitals slightly, that "The copartnership known as Smith & Jones, composed of John Smith and George Jones, and the said John Smith and George Jones as individuals⁹⁴ be and each is hereby declared and adjudged bankrupt." If, however, the petition asks for a partnership adjudication only, that alone should be granted.⁹⁵ The form of the adjudication is, however, important only to the bankrupts. The adjudication should conform to the contents of the petition and that which is not asked for should not be granted; so where the bankruptcy of the partnership itself is sought independent of that of the individual partners, adjudication should not be granted in respect to the partners although it may have been shown that the partners were each of them insolvent.⁹⁶ Where the partnership and the partners are insolvent, and one of them dies, the adjudication of the surviving partner, carries with it the entire rights and obligations of the partnership as it existed prior to the death of the other partner.⁹⁷ The order of adjudication is only conclusive against those entitled to be heard in the proceedings; it is not conclusive as to the existence of a partnership or the title to its assets as against a trustee of one of the alleged partners who was not permitted to intervene.⁹⁸

b. Effect of adjudication on discharge.—(1) IN GENERAL.—If the adjudication is of the firm only, the discharge following it will be a bar only to firm debts.⁹⁹ If the application is for individual bankruptcies only, the discharge will not affect firm liabilities.¹⁰⁰ But, while in the first case it would seem necessary that the individuals file new separate petitions,^{100a} in the latter case an amendment of the petition and adjudication praying for the partnership bankruptcy has been allowed. Where new individual petitions are filed, they may be consolidated with the pending partnership proceeding. Where, however, the adjudication is of the individual partners only, a question has arisen which is still undetermined.

(2) DISCHARGE OF PARTNERSHIP DEBTS.—Following the entity doctrine and the controlling authorities under the former law,¹⁰¹ the earlier cases held that to cut partnership debts there must be a partnership adjudication.¹⁰² The later cases, however, seem to hold that a discharge resting on an individual adjudication will, provided there be no firm assets and the firm creditors are scheduled and receive notice, be an available bar to subsequent suits on the bankrupt's partnership liabilities.¹⁰³ While such a view is necessarily an exception to the entity doctrine, it seems more reasonable. The Meyers case¹⁰⁴ is clearly distinguishable, for in that case there were firm assets.¹⁰⁵ If there are no firm assets and the firm is insolvent, a judgment on a partnership debt may be released by the discharge of an individual partner.¹⁰⁶ It has also been held that where a partner is adjudicated a bankrupt upon his individual petition, which is silent as to partnership assets and liabilities, although his schedules disclose both individual and firm debts, the bankrupt is not entitled to a discharge from partnership debts, although the firm no longer exists and is without assets.¹⁰⁷ It is difficult to declare a rule based upon the majority of the cases. A very unsatisfactory conflict exists among the authorities. It may be asserted, however, in view of the reasoning in nearly all the cases, that where there are no firm assets and the firm creditors are duly scheduled and receive notice, the individual discharge of a bankrupt partner should operate as a discharge from partnership debts.¹⁰⁸ The scheduling of the firm debts

App. Div. 269, 102 N. Y. Supp. 412, in which case the court states, that the tendency of the decisions in the State courts is toward holding that where a court acquires jurisdiction and grants a full discharge, in the language of the statute, from all provable debts properly scheduled, that joint as well as individual debts are discharged; In re Kaufman (D. C., N. Y.), 14 Am. B. R. 393, 136 Fed. 262, holding that where an individual partner on adjudication, schedules firm debts his discharge releases him from liability thereon, and after the term at which it was granted, may be amended so as to discharge him as an individual from any liability on account of the debts of the firm.

In the case of Jarecki Mfg. Co. v. McElwaine (C. C. A., Ind.), 5 Am. B. R. 751, 107 Fed. 249, the court said: "There is some disagreement in the authorities as to whether a discharge of an individual partner releases him from liability upon partnership debts. The great weight of authority is in favor of the doctrine that the discharge of a partner on his individual petition operates as a release both from individual and his partnership indebtedness. The cases which held to the contrary seemed to be based upon a misconception of the extent of the rights of the trustee over the bankrupt's and notice to creditors are prerequisites to a discharge of an individual partnership from firm debts.¹⁰⁹ Of course, if the adjudication is of the partnership but not of all the partners, individual creditors of the non-consenting insolvent partner are not affected by the discharge.¹¹⁰

V. JURISDICTION WHERE PARTNERS ARE DOMICILED IN DIFFERENT DISTRICTS.

Subsection c provides that: "The court of bankruptcy which has jurisdiction of one of the partners may have jurisdiction of all the partners and of the administration of the partnership and individual property." The analogous provision in the law of 1867 was: "If such copartners reside in different districts, that court in which the petition was first filed shall retain exclusive jurisdiction over the case." This clause did not occur in the law of 1841. General Order XVI under the law of 1867 is substantially the same as present General Order VI, the last two sentences of which are as follows: "In case two or more petitions shall be filed in different districts by different members of the same partnership for an adjudication of the bankruptcy of said partnership, the court in which the petition is first filed having jurisdiction shall take and retain jurisdiction over all proceedings in such bankruptcy until the same shall be closed; and if such petitions shall be filed in the same district, action shall be first had upon the one first filed. But the court so retaining jurisdiction shall, if satisfied that it is for the greatest convenience of parties in interest that another of said courts should estate and as to the effect upon the firm of the bankruptcy of one of its members. The cases holding that a discharge granted to one member of a firm does not release him from partnership indebtedness, where he alone is adjudged a bankrupt, proceed on the principle that a trustee could not acquire possession of and administer the assets of the firm. In so holding, it seems to have been overlooked, that the bankruptcy of one member is ipso facto a dissolution of the firm, and that while the solvent partner would be allowed to administer the partnership assets, yet the trustee in bankruptcy is entitled to the bankrupt's share of the partnership assets, after the payment of the partnership debts. The separate estate of the bankrupt partner and his beneficial interests in the firm, after the payment of firm debts, is to be administered by the trustee for the payment of the bankrupt's individual debts. The adjudication of one partner as a bankrupt, brings within the jurisdiction of the court his entire estate for administration, and if, after the payment of his individual debts out of his individual estate, any surplus remains, it will be applicable to the payment of firm indebtedness. For the purpose of reaching any such surplus, firm creditors may prove against the estate of the bankrupt partner. The most elaborate and exhaustive discussion of the subject under the bankrupt act of 1867, is found in the case of Wilkins v. Davis, Fed. Cas. 17,664, and in my opinion, the reasoning in that case as applied to the present bankrupt act, clearly demonstrates that the discharge of one partner, releases him from all partnership indebtedness."

R. 1, 96 Fed. 591, the court said: "To become entitled to a discharge barring the firm creditors under such circumstances, the proper foundation must be laid in the proceedings instituted on behalf of the bankrupt partnership. In the petition originally filed it should be averred that the petitioner is indebted in his individual capacity, if such be the fact, and also as a member of a firm, naming it and giving the names of the several partners; and the petition should pray for the discharge from the firm as well as his individual debts. To this petition should be attached the proper schedules setting forth the firm debts, the firm property, if any, and all other matters, the same as is required in the case of a proceeding brought by one of the partners." proceed with the case, order them to be transferred to that court." It will be noticed that this provision supplements subdivision c and gives it effect. The statute and the general order modified the rigid rule of the former law, that the court which has acquired jurisdiction of one of the partners had exclusive jurisdiction over both subject-matter and of the partners.¹¹¹ Under the general order the court retaining jurisdiction may transfer the case to another court for the greater convenience of the parties in interest, thus substituting the flexible rule of convenience of parties in the place of the rigid rule of the former law.¹¹² The proceeding may be brought in another district where the partner might have petitioned as an individual.¹¹³

VI. TRUSTEES OF BANKRUPT PARTNERSHIPS.

a. In general.—This section contains certain special provisions applicable to trustees of bankrupt partnerships. Except as otherwise expressly provided in this section the powers and duties of such trustees are the same as in the case of trustees of individuals. It will not be attempted under this section to declare rules governing in all respects partnership trustees in the performance of their duties. Subdivision b provides that: "In other respects (except as to the appointment of trustees) so far as possible the estate shall be administered as herein provided for other estates."

b. Choice of trustees.—Subdivision b provides that "The creditors of the partnership shall appoint the trustee." This preference in the choice of the trustee was also contained in the acts of 1841 and 1867.¹¹⁴ There is here an apparent discrimination in favor of the joint creditor, for the individual creditor has a petitioning creditor's debt in proceedings against the copartnership;¹¹⁵ so also firm creditors can vote for the trustees of the individual estates;¹¹⁶ but an individual creditor of one of the partners may not vote at a meeting of the firm creditors for a partnership trustee.¹¹⁷ This restriction only applies in the case of a joint petition and not where a petition is separately brought against an individual partner.¹¹⁸ The reason for the apparent preference of firm over individual creditors will appear hereafter.¹¹⁹ Where possible and convenient the same trustees should be appointed for partnership and individual estates; but separate trustees may be appointed in the discretion of the court where the circumstances demand it.¹²⁰

of the partners so far as is necessary to settle the partnership estate.¹²¹ He becomes, by virtue of his office, the trustee of the separate estates of the individual partners, for the purpose of paying the partnership debts.¹²² Where the adjudication is that of a bankrupt partner, the trustee may not administer the affairs of solvent members of the firm, and his duties will be restricted to the ascertained interest of the bankrupt partner in the partnership; if any controversy arises as to such interest the solvent partner's claim is adverse, and he may insist that such claim be adjudicated out of bankruptcy.¹²³ But where the individual and sole surviving member of a partnership is adjudged a bankrupt, the bankruptcy court has complete jurisdiction over the partnership estate.^{123a}

d. Separate account.—Subdivision d of this section requires the trustee to keep separate accounts of the partnership property and of the property belonging to the individual partners. This follows from the very nature of his duties and the interrelation of the debts and assets over which he is given charge. There were similar clauses in the laws of 1841 and 1867. The necessity of keeping separate accounts is obvious.¹²⁴

e. Expenses and fees.—It is provided in subdivision e that "the expenses shall be paid from the partnership property and the individual property in such proportion as the court shall determine." There are few reported cases under the present law.¹²⁵ In computing trustees fees where the partnership and its members are joined in one petition, the proceeding is regarded as a single proceeding, and allowances are not to be made from partnership and individual estates, separately computed.¹²⁶

VII. PROVABILITY OF DEBTS.

a. In general.—The provisions of § 63 of the bankruptcy act declaring the debts which may be proved and allowed against a bankrupt estate are applicable to debts against a partnership. A member of a partnership being liable for all of the partnership debts, a debt against the partnership is provable against the individual estate of the bankrupt members,¹²⁷ but a claim arising on an obligation executed by a part only of the members of the partnership is not provable in bankruptcy against the estate of the partnership.^{127a}

the proof of the claim of the partnership estate against individual assets and vice versa." But this subsection does not permit a solvent partner to prove against the separate estate of his bankrupt partner until all the partnership creditors have been paid in full;¹²⁸ nor a retired partner on notes received by him for his interest in the firm.¹²⁹

(2) PRIOR PAYMENT OF CREDITORS.—The general rule is that the separate estate of one partner shall not claim against the joint estate of the partnership in competition with joint creditors, nor shall the joint estate claim against the separate estate in competition with the separate creditors.¹³⁰ One principle may be deduced from the cases to the effect, that where the partnership and the individual members thereof are all adjudged bankrupts and the estates of all are before the court, the rule of distribution prescribed by § 5 (f), is not to be varied by the proof of the claim of a partnership estate against an individual estate and vice versa, as provided in § 5(g). In other words, the joint creditors of a bankrupt partnership must be paid before the claim of an individual partner may be paid, and, on the other hand, the individual creditors of the bankrupt partners must be paid before the claim of the partnership against the partner will be allowed.¹³¹ The claim of a partner for money advanced to the firm in excess of his agreed contribution to the capital of the firm is subject to this principle; such claim may not share in the distribution of the estate of the bankrupt partnership until all the joint creditors are paid.¹³² Subsection g of this section was evidently not intended to modify the rule that before claims of partners against a partnership may be paid firm debts must be disposed of. There must be some clearly expressed statutory provision in order that the partner may have this privilege. This subsection is to be construed as consummating the evident purpose of the act to secure to creditors of the firm and all the members thereof an equitable distribution of the assets belonging to the respective estates. This distribution must be made in accordance with well recognized principles, applicable to the rights and liabilities of partnerships and the partners comprising the same.¹³³ A Claim of partner against partnership estate.—In the case of In re Denning (D. C., Mass.), 8 Am. B. R. 133, 114 Fed. 219, the court said: "It is plain that the bankrupt's former partner cannot be allowed to prove in this case. To permit him to do so, would permit him to compete with his own creditors. There are joint creditors in this case who have proved, and until the claims of the joint creditors are settled, the partner cannot share in the distribution of his former partner's estate. There is nothing in section 5 (g) of the act to change this well-established rule." See also Matter of Tassenari (D. C., Mass.), 41 Am. B. R. 148, 249 Fed. 990.

In the case of Matter of Union Bank (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 148, 184 Fed. 224, it was held that while the trustee of a bankrupt partnership is entitled to prove a claim of the partnership against the individual estate of one of the bankrupt partners, his claim cannot share therein pari passu with the claims of other individual creditors, but only after the other individual creditors have been paid in full. It was further held that the claim of the partnership cannot share pari passu with the claims of other creditors of one of the bankrupt partners, on the principle that a partnership is an entity distinct from its membership. Since the recognition of the partnership as an entity cannot, in the absence of express statutory authority, be said to work a change in the rule fixing the substantial rights of creditors respectively of the partnership and of its individual members.

¹³³. Construction of sub-section (g).—There is no indication in this sub-section taken as a whole, that there was any intent on the part of Congress to change the rule of distribution which had heretofore been held to be equitable. The intent was simply to remove all arbitrary rules of practice and procedure which had interfered with the distribution of the estates of bankrupt partnerships and partners, in accordance with the settled rules of equity. The sub-section does not change previously existing rules of distribution, but merely abolishes certain technical rules of procedure to secure equitable distribution of such estates. In re Effinger (D. C., Md.), 25 Am. B. R. 930, 184 Fed. 728; Farmers & Mechanics' Nat. Bank of solvent partner cannot prove his own separate debt against the separate estate of the bankrupt partner so as to come into competition with the joint creditors of the partnership.¹³⁴ But this rule would probably not apply where a creditor of a bankrupt estate becomes, after the debt is incurred, a joint partner of the bankrupt in an entirely separate and distinct enterprise.¹³⁵

(3) SUBROGATION OF PARTNER.—It is, however, well settled that the right of subrogation exists between a partnership estate and the estate of a partner.¹³⁶ Hence, when a retired partner is later compelled to respond to his partnership liability, because the continuing partner is unable to do so, he becomes subrogated to the claim of the creditors pro tanto, and thus may prove against the partnership estate as well as the separate estate of the bankrupt partner.¹³⁷ Where a retired partner left the money which he had invested in the firm as a loan, and provides in his will that such money should be permitted to remain in the firm for five years after his death, the legatee is entitled to prove the claim against the partnership, upon its being adjudicated a bankrupt some years after the death of the testator; under such circumstances, the interest of the decedent did not remain in the firm as capital at the risk of the business but was a loan to the firm.¹³⁸ Where one partner pays all the debts of a partnership, whose other member has been adjudged a bankrupt, the sum which may be shown to be due him upon a partnership accounting is a debt which may be proved against the estate of the bankrupt partner.¹³⁹

a. So as to prevent preferences.—The court is authorized by subsection g of this section to “marshal the assets of the partnership estate and individual estates so as to prevent preference.” These words and the clause in which they are found supplement and emphasize the first clause of the subsection. Whether “preferences” here means a bankruptcy preference as defined in § 60-a is doubtful. Yet the estate of the individual being often a creditor of the copartnership and vice versa, it is possible that the definition of “preference” there phrased may apply. It has been said to be “aimed at the fraud brought about by partners agreeing just before bankruptcy to change joint into separate estates,” thus accomplishing preferences to the separate creditors.¹⁴⁰ But it is hardly supposable that the partners so agreeing will be able Clause (g) relates to the procedure under it. The law in (f) demands that ‘the net proceeds shall be appropriated’ as directed by it, while (g) provides simply that in carrying out these precepts and as an aid in doing so, the court may do certain things, to-wit: permit proof of claims of partnership estates against individual estates and vice versa and marshal the assets of such estates so as to prevent preferences and secure equitable distribution of such estates.”

140. The preferences supposed to interfere with a just and equitable distribution may result from the action of partners calculated to show themselves solvent at the time and, unless they can, the transaction becomes actually fraudulent and may be disregarded. The evident purpose of the subsection is not only to prevent preferences, in the technical meaning of that word, but also secure the equitable distribution of the assets of the several estates among both firm and individual creditors.¹⁴¹

b. Marshalling estate of unadjudicated partner against his consent.—Subsection g authorizes the court to marshal and distribute the assets of the partnership estate and individual estates. Subsection h provides in effect that where one or more but not all of the members of a partnership are adjudged bankrupt, the partnership property shall not be administered in bankruptcy unless by the consent of the unadjudicated partner. This provision is for the purpose, as will hereafter be considered, of enabling a solvent partner to settle the partnership business outside of bankruptcy. The consent here referred to is only required to prevent bankruptcy where a proceeding is against one or more of the partners but not against the partnership. Such consent is not required when the proceedings are against the partnership and one of its members.¹⁴² If the proceeding is directed against the partnership, subsection g permits the marshalling of the assets of the partnership and of the individual partners so as to provide for the payment of the partnership debts.¹⁴³ The subsection declares a rule of administration and does not apply until the partnership property is placed in custodia legis.¹⁴⁴ The language of this subsection must be reasonably construed with the view to carrying into effect its obvious purpose. It does not provide for the adjudication of an individual partner who does not consent thereto.¹⁴⁵ Under the entity doctrine a partnership may be adjudged a bankrupt, irrespective of an adjudication of bankruptcy against any of its members. But this doctrine may not be applied so as to prevent the exercise of the power expressly conferred upon a court to "marshal" the estates of the partnership and of the partners. Where the circumstances demand it, the court will upon adjudication of partnership, administer not only the estate of the partnership, but also the estates of partners who have not been adjudicated bankrupts.¹⁴⁶ So that where the partnership has been

c. Distribution.—(1) IN GENERAL.—It is provided in subsection g that the court may marshal the partnership and individual estates, "and secure the equitable distribution of the property of the several estates," and subsection f provides for the appropriation of the net proceeds of the several estates to the payment of the debts either of the partnership or of the partner as therein directed. Under such circumstances, the trustee has no authority to demand or interfere with the firm assets. In the case of Amsinck v. Bean, 22 Wall. 395, 402, which arose under the act of 1867, it was held that while the assignee in bankruptcy of the joint stock and property of a partnership is required by the statute to administer the separate estate of the individual members, as well as that of the firm, there is no reciprocal regulation with regard to the estate of the partnership, where an individual member of it has alone been adjudged a bankrupt." 150. Administration of estate of nonadjudicated member.—Where an act of bankruptcy has been committed by a partnership whose individual members, as well as the firm, are insolvent, the fact that one of the partners cannot be adjudicated an involuntary bankrupt because chiefly engaged in farming, does not prevent the adjudication of the firm and its other members; and, in such case, the estate of the nonadjudicated member is brought into the proceeding for administration. In re Duke & Son (D. there are no separate assets belonging to the individuals, administration and distribution follow the same practice and rules as in individual cases. Where however, there are both joint and separate estates, especially where the court has not jurisdiction of all the members, complications result which may be troublesome and require careful treatment.¹⁵²

(2) PARTNERSHIP AND INDIVIDUAL CREDITORS.—Subsection f provides that the net proceeds of the partnership property shall be appropriated to the payment of the partnership debts and the net proceeds of the individual estate of each partner to the payment of his individual debts. The surplus remaining after the payment of individual debts may be distributed among partnership creditors; and the surplus remaining after the payment of partnership debts may be distributed among the individual creditors in proportion to the interest of each partner in the partnership assets.¹⁵³ The rule of law phrased in the present statute is declaratory of the equitable rule that partnership property is primarily a fund for the payment of partnership debts,¹⁵⁴ and that

The priority of firm creditors depends upon the existence of the partner's lien and if a partner consents that the firm assets shall become the individual property of one of the partners the priority of the firm creditors is gone; therefore, where firm assets are transferred to another the creditors of the firm are deprived of their priority in bankruptcy proceedings. Matter of Stringer (C. Money advanced by partner.—In the case of In re Effinger (D. C., Md.), 25 Am. B. R. 930, 184 Fed. 723, it was insisted that if a partner has advanced money to the partnership beyond his agreed contribution to its capital, his individual creditors are entitled to have his claim against the partnership proved and allowed, and to have it participate in the distribution of the firm assets on equal terms with the other firm creditors. The court on this question said: "Partnership creditors have a right to insist that assets which have been paid by a partner into a firm, and which are found in the firm at the time of its bankruptcy, shall, as against him and his individual creditors, be held to be partnership property. A partner cannot swell the assets of his firm by contributing money or property to it, and then when the firm becomes insolvent, assert therein his own interest or that of his individual creditors for what he had paid into the firm was a mere loan to it, and was not part of its assets. If the contention of the individual creditor in this case is sound, little reliance could in practice be placed on partnership statements."

Bankrupt firm composed of individual and partnership conducting a separate business.—Where a bankrupt partnership is composed of an individual and a separate partnership doing business in another State, under whose laws it had made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, and the assignee of the partnership member, having liquidated its assets, has turned over the proceeds to bankrupt's trustee, although bankrupt's creditors may prove against such fund, the creditors of the partnership member have a prior claim thereon which must first be satisfied. R. 536, 127 Fed. 547, in which the court said: "The present Bankruptcy Act recognizes the equitable the individual debts of a partner are entitled to be first paid out of his individual property.¹⁵⁵ It is found in substantially the same language in the statutes of 1841 and 1867.¹⁵⁶ The English act contains practically the same provision.¹⁵⁷

(3) EFFECT OF WAIVER OR RELEASE PRIOR TO BANKRUPTCY.—The right of the creditor of the partnership to payment out of the partnership property in preference to the individual creditor is derivative in nature, and is worked out by subrogation to the existing rights of one of the partners to assert this equitable principle. Until the assets have been brought into the custody of the law, each partner has plenary power at any time to release or waive his right; and if no partner retains this right, then no creditor of the partnership has it. However this release or waiver must have been bona fide on the part of the partners and without any intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors.¹⁵⁸

(4) SOLVENCY OF PARTNERS; NO FIRM ASSETS.—The rule has been held to be subject to the exception that where there are no firm assets and no solvent living partner, the firm creditors share pari passu with the individual creditors.¹⁵⁹ The exception itself is qualified by cases (1) which seem to overlook the necessity of the existence of a solvent living partner,¹⁶⁰ and (2) which question whether it is absolutely essential that there be no assets or merely not sufficient assets to pay expenses of administration.¹⁶¹ The tendency is, however, to cast aside this ancient and inequitable exception.¹⁶² The opinion of Judge Lowell in the Wilcox case is an historical monograph of great value. It is to be hoped that it has sounded the knell of all exceptions to the broad rule that joint creditors share in joint assets and individual creditors in individual assets.¹⁶³ The Supreme Court in the case of Farmers and Mechanics' Nat. Bank v. Ridge Ave. Bank¹⁶⁴ has expressly approved the opinion of Judge able rule that partnership property is primarily a fund for the payment of copartnership debts, and that the interest of a copartner is subject to that special equity and attaches only to the surplus remaining after the payment of the copartnership debts."

If there is a surplus of the separate estates, it shall be dealt with as a part of the joint estate. If there is a surplus of the joint estate it shall be dealt with as a part of the respective separate estate in proportion to the right and interest of each partner in the joint estate. ¹⁶⁴ 240 U. S. 498, 36 Am. B. R. 728, 50 L. Ed. 767, in which Chief Justice White, commended the conclusion of Judge Lowell and it was held that when a partnership, as such, is insolvent and each individual member is also insolvent, and the only fund for distribution is produced by the individual estate of one member, the individual creditors

Lowell and the rule now is established firmly that although there are no firm assets and no solvent partner, the firm creditors may only participate in the surplus of individual assets after the payment of individual debts.¹⁶⁵ The result is that where one member of a firm is adjudicated a bankrupt and there are no firm assets, the firm creditors may not participate in the distribution of the individual estate of the partner until his individual creditors have been paid in full.¹⁶⁶ Regard must be had for the plain and unequivocal language of subsection f which provides for the payment of partnership debts out of partnership property, and of individual debts out of individual property; individual debts may only be paid out of the surplus remaining after the payment of partnership debts, and, on the other hand, partnership debts may only be paid out of the surplus of the individual estate remaining after the payment of individual debts. The statute must not be construed to admit of exceptions which do not exist. If it had been intended to make an exception in a case where there are no partnership assets or where the partnership and all the members thereof are insolvent, provision would have been made therefor.¹⁶⁷ The character of a partnership debt is not changed by its reduction to judgment; judgment creditors of a partnership do not become creditors of the individual partners so as to permit them to share equally with individual creditors in the distribution of individual assets.¹⁶⁸ This subsection of such member are entitled to priority in the distribution of the fund.

A., 4th Cir.), 17 Am. B. R. 834, 149 Fed. 975. In the cases last cited the Circuit Court of Appeals calls attention to the conflicting decisions on these questions and says: "The decision of Judge Lowell in In re Wilcox (D. C., Mass.), 2 Am. B. R. 177, 94 Fed. 84, contains an extended review of the entire subject and especially a history of the law, to which we take the liberty of referring. The Circuit Court of Appeals of two of the circuits have taken antagonistic views under the present bankruptcy act. In Conrader v. Cohen, 9 Am. B. R. 619, 121 Fed. 801, a decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the 3d Circuit, the petitioner's right to share as partnership creditors in the individual assets of the bankrupt, is fully recognized; and in re James, 13 Am. B. R. 341, 133 Fed. 912, a decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the 2d Circuit, a contrary view is taken. A careful consideration of the entire subject and review of the authorities, convinces this court that whatever may have been the correct rule under the former bankruptcy acts, the latter case presents the correct construction of the law under the present act; and however much force there may have been in the contention made by petitioners under the former bankruptcy acts, or what may be the correct general doctrine applicable to the settlement and distribution of partnership estates, that it was clearly within the power of Congress to adopt a method for marshalling such assets, to be applied to the respective classes of creditors, which it has done, and in terms too clear and comprehensive to admit of the necessity for interpretation further than to adopt and follow its plain mandates." See Matter of Hull (D. C., Ohio), 34 Am. B. R. 447, 224 Fed. 796.

Ed. 767; In re Mills (D. C., Ind.), 2 Am. B. R. 667, 95 Fed. 269; Buckingham v. First National Bank (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 12 Am. B. R. 465, 131 Fed. 192.

Exception to rule.—In the case of In re Henderson (D. C., W. Va.), 16 Am. B. R. 91, 142 Fed. 468, affd. 17 Am. B. R. 834, 149 Fed. 975, the court in speaking of the exception says: "It is admitted to be an exception to the general rule, which rule in plain, clear, apt and in unambiguous language is written in the law itself, while the exception is not; on the contrary it must depend solely upon judicial construction, which, because it in effect provides a different method of distribution from that provided by the law itself cannot be considered short of mere judicial legislation. It is to be recalled how easily the Congress, had it designed such exception to be made, could have incorporated it as such in the law itself."

168. Effect of reducing claims to judgment. — The reduction of claims to judgment by partnership creditors, within four months of the bankruptcy of the partnership, does not change the character of such indebtedness treats of administration in the bankruptcy court, and hence of the partnership and individual property, the title to which is in the bankrupt at the time the petition against him is presented to the court.¹⁶⁹ It has been held that the interest on a note given to a bank by a partner should not be paid out of the assets of the partner, where it appears that the whole net proceeds of the individual and partnership assets are insufficient to meet the partnership debts.¹⁷⁰

d. What are firm assets and what are individual assets.—Questions of this character frequently arise, sometimes from the nature of the property, but more often from transactions between the partners, or between the firm and one partner. Again, the test is substantially bona fides. If the firm be solvent and the transaction be in good faith, one member can purchase the assets or buy out the interest of the other partners.¹⁷¹ But if the firm be insolvent, or if for any reason the transaction would be inequitable, it will be treated as void.¹⁷² It is well settled also that real property purchased for partnership purposes with partnership funds, even though held in the name of an individual, is, as to the firm's creditors, personal property.¹⁷³ Premises used by the partnership for partnership purposes are presumptively partnership property.¹⁷⁴ Generally speaking, the partnership property consists of its money, its stock in trade, its outstanding accounts, and all other property purchased by the firm's money;¹⁷⁵ while the individual property consists of those chattels or rights possessed by the individual partner solely.¹⁷⁶ The fact that a life insurance policy was pledged to secure the payment of a partnership debt, does not make the policy partnership property.¹⁷⁷ Property originally owned from a partnership debt to an individual debt, but changes the form of the debt only. Its character as a partnership debt remains as before, and for which each member of the partnership may be liable, if the partnership assets are insufficient to pay the sum; and section 5f of the Bankruptcy Act, providing how the distribution of the assets of the partnership and of the individual members thereof shall be made among their creditors, controls in the distribution of such assets. Matter of Haeker & Co. (D. c. Firm debts and individual debts.—(1) IN GENERAL.—As a rule it will not be difficult to distinguish between firm obligations and individual obligations.¹⁸⁰ The determination depends upon the real character of the transaction, and if that be unmistakably and exclusively a partnership one, neither fiction nor implication should be resorted to to give it a different character.^{180a} Some of the numerous authorities relative to the provability of individual partnership debts are cited and considered in the foot-note.¹⁸¹

(2) COMMERCIAL PAPER; FIRM AS MAKER OR INDORSER.—Whenever a partnership name appears on commercial paper the firm is presumably bound, and the burden is on the firm to show that it is not liable.¹⁸² So where a partnership indorses a promissory note for the accommodation of the maker the obligation is presumably that of the partnership and it becomes allowable against the partnership estate, in favor of a bona fide holder of the note.¹⁸³ Any note or other obligation signed or indorsed in the firm name, the benefits of which accrued to the firm, is a partnership debt.¹⁸⁴ On the other hand, where the notes, although signed by all of the partners, and therefore joint obligations, are not given in furtherance of the business of the partnership, but are merely the joint individual debts of the partners, they are not entitled to share in the distribution of the partnership property equally with partnership debts.^{184a} The note or other obligation of one of the individual partners, although given for a consideration moving to the partnership, may nevertheless be treated as an individual debt.¹⁸⁵ But where the note or obligation, although partner who purchases judgments against his firm may prove them against the individual estates to the amount of his partners' respective shares (In re Carmichael [D. C., Iowa], 2 Am. B. R. 815, 96 Fed. 594); a note made by the firm and indorsed by a member of it continues to be the obligation of the firm, whether the individual bankrupt's liability as indorser is fixed or not (Lamoille Bank v. Stevens' Estate [D. C., Vt.], 6 Am. B. R. 164, 107 Fed. 245); notes taken by a partner in payment of his interest in the firm within four months of the bankruptcy of the continuing partner are not provable against the latter until all the firm creditors are paid (In re Denning [D. C., Mass.], 8 Am. B. R. 133, 114 Fed. 219). Where the surviving member of a solvent partnership upon its dissolution, immediately formed a new firm and took over the assets of the old firm and placed them in the new firm and assumed therewith the debts of the old firm, the debts of the old firm may be proven against the bankrupt estate of the new firm. Cas. 9,863, firm indorsements were made at the time the firm was in an embarrassed financial condition, and it was held that they were not new considerations moving from the individual creditor to the firm, within the four months' period, and the claim should be disallowed against the partnership estate.

Bankrupt firm as makers.—The claim arising from a note signed by the bankrupt firm as makers and indorsed by the individual bankrupt, one of the members of the firm, remains a firm obligation whether the individual bankrupt's liability as indorser has been fixed or not. Lamoille County Nat'l

Power of partner to bind firm by indorsement.—In an ordinary trading partnership, one partner has implied authority as to transactions within the scope of the partnership business, to borrow money on the credit of the firm, to draw and accept, make and indorse bills of exchange and promissory notes in the name of the firm. Such partner has no implied authority to sign the firm name as an accommodation indorser to a negotiable promissory note, but where he does so the partnership is liable thereon to an innocent indorsee who acquired the note in the usual course of trade for value and before maturity. Notes signed by partners.—When persons who are partners unite in making notes; though they sign their several names instead of the partnership name, if the note is one given in a partnership transaction and the partnership receives the consideration, they should be proved and allowed as a partnership obliga-

signed or indorsed by an individual partner, is for the sole benefit of the firm, it is a partnership debt;¹⁸⁶ and it may be shown by parol evidence that notes signed by the individual members of a firm were partnership obligations.¹⁸⁷

(3) PARTNER SIGNING INDIVIDUAL NAME.—The question as to the character of the debt will also arise where each member of the firm has in its behalf incurred an individual liability by signing his name instead of the firm name. The debt thereby becomes individual only.¹⁸⁸ But an obligation executed by the members of a firm in their individual capacity may be proven against the partnership estate and share in the partnership assets, upon extrinsic evidence showing that the obligations was intended as a partnership debt, incurred in the furtherance of the firm business.^{188a} The fact that the proceeds of a loan to a partner went into the partnership business and was utilized by the partnership for partnership purposes does not make the loan a partnership debt; the question is in each case was credit given to a partner or to the partnership?¹⁸⁹ An individual debt is none the less such because tion in bankruptcy. Matter of Kendrick & Co. (D. C., Vt.), 35 Am. B. R. 623, 226 Fed. 978.

A joint and several note, signed by all the members of a partnership in their individual capacity, constitutes two contracts, and a holder thereof is entitled to prove his claim against and participate in the distribution of both the estate of the partnership and of the individual composing it. Where notes have been signed by one or the other member of a partnership, entered upon the partnership books, and treated as partnership transactions, and the partnership has received the benefit, claimants may treat the notes as the obligations of individuals and claim against the individual estate, or may treat the signatures of the individuals as the signature of the partnership by said individuals as the agents of the partnership, and so claim against the partnership. Matter of Kuhn & Co. (D. C., Ref. Pa.), 36 Am. B. R. 615, 64 Pittsburgh Leg. News 161.

189. Strause v. Hooper (D. C., N. C.), 5 Am. B. R. 225, 105 Fed. 590, in which case the respective fathers of the two partners of the bankrupt firm, had, prior to bankruptcy, each loaned a sum of money, with intent to set up their respective sons in business, and taken as security, bonds or notes signed by both partners individually. It was held that the notes were the individual debts of the partners.

Notes signed by partner in his own name.—In the case of In re Lehigh Lumber Co. (D. C., Pa.), 4 Am. B. R. 221, 101 Fed. 216, it appeared that more than four months prior to bankruptcy, a creditor of the bankrupt firm surrendered a claim against the firm and took the note of one of the partners in lieu thereof, which was renewed from time to time and judgment finally entered thereon within four months of the bankruptcy of the firm; it was held that such creditor ceased to be a creditor of the firm upon taking the individual note and the giving of such note and the judgment thereon did not constitute a voidable preference as against the firm.

The question whether an indebtedness is a firm or individual indebtedness often arises in cases where all the members have incurred a written obligation by signing their respective individual names instead of the firm name. Where this is the case the weight of authority is that it is the individual indebtedness of each of the members of the firm and not a partnership indebtedness. The following authorities under former bankruptcy act are in point. In re Webb, Fed. Cas. 17,313; In re Bucyrus Machine Co., Fed. Cas. 2,100; In re Miller, 1 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 38; In re Herrick, Fed. Cas. 6,420; In re Roddin, Fed. Cas. 11,989. See also In re Waren, Fed. Cas. 17,191, holding that in such case there is merely a presumption that the obligation is individual rather than firm, and that the presumption may be rebutted if in fact it is a firm obligation. In the case of In re Thomas, Fed. Cas. 13,886, 8 Biss. 139, a note was signed by the partners individually for a loan, the proceeds of which went to the partnership. The court cited the above cases and said: "Thus it results that after the indorsement or individual signature of one of the firm, the firm creditor would have no right to claim against the individual assets until individual creditors have been first satisfied. But holding the individual indorsement or signature the firm creditor may in the first instance prove against the separate as well as the joint estate. Now such separate liability would seem to be at least in the nature of security, though differing radically it is true, in character and form, from that of a mortgage, and yet double proof by the firm creditor in such cases may be made without any abatement of advantage which his diligence has secured."

Mortgage of individual property to secure partnership obligation.—The bankrupts, who were joint partners, contracted as individuals for the purchase of certain goods on the instalment plan. One of the partners gave a bond and mortgage on his individual property as security for the payment thereof, binding himself to pay the obligation to the mortgagee. Contract of sale, bond and mortgage were assigned for valuable consideration before any default. It was held that under the State law which made joint partners severally liable for partnership obligations, the partner giving the mortgage was a principal debtor, and not a guarantor or it is entered on the firm books with the knowledge of the creditor and payments have been made thereon by checks on partnership funds.¹⁹⁰

(4) ASSUMPTION OF PARTNERSHIP DEBTS.—The question as to whether a debt is a firm or an individual debt arises where one partner has bought out the other and assumed the partnership debts. The debts thereby become the individual debts of the continuing partner, provided the firm was solvent and the transaction was not tainted with fraud.¹⁹¹ It does not necessarily follow that the creditors of the firm must look to the continuing partner for the payment of their debts. If the bankruptcy of the continuing partner ensues, the creditors of the partnership may not have lost their lien but may follow the firm assets and assert the priority of their liens in respect thereto.¹⁹² If the partnership creditors either impliedly or expressly consent to the assumption of the debts by the continuing partner they become individual creditors and the debts are provable in the same manner as the other individual debts.¹⁹³ If the retiring partner is, notwithstanding the transfer of his interest in the firm assets, compelled to pay any of the debts of the firm,

That the bond and mortgage were assignable with the debt before default in payment on the contract of sale; and that the assignee was entitled to the surplus proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property, as against the trustee in bankruptcy of the individual mortgagor. In re Forse & Roseboom (D. C., N. Y.), 25 Am. B. R. 843, 184 Fed. 85.

Individual notes of partner pledged as security for firm obligation.—A partner under a firm contract made by him personally with a firm creditor, pledged as collateral for a firm obligation on which he was indorser certain notes made by him individually to the firm for personal loans, and after the bankruptcy of the firm and its members, the creditor sold the collateral, pursuant to the terms of the contract. It was held that the obligation of the partner on his notes to the firm was wholly independent of his obligation as indorser on the firm notes, and that the purchaser of the individual notes was entitled to prove a claim thereon against the individual estate of such partner. In re White (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 541, 183 Fed. 310. See also In re Effinger (D. C., Md.), 25 Am. B. R. 930, 184 Fed. 728. Thereafter the wife purchased her husband's interest in the firm which was of value, and within a few days sold her interest to the copartner for $1,500 taking his notes. About four months thereafter the copartner filed a petition in bankruptcy. Held, that the wife of the partner was entitled to prove her claims against the firm assets, as the partner-

No trust or lien in favor of partnership creditors.—The assumption of payment of partnership debts by one partner in consideration of an absolute conveyance of the partnership property to him by the other creates no trust in and fastens no lien upon the property thus conveyed in favor of the partnership creditors prior to any request for the interposition of a court to administer the partnership property. Sargent v. Blake (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 115, 160 Fed. 57.

he is subrogated to the rights of the firm creditors whose debts were paid by him, and the amount thereof becomes a debt against the continuing partner,¹⁹⁴ but he is not entitled to prove a claim for the debts for which he as a partner remains liable without showing payment thereof by himself.^{194a} When, upon the retirement of one partner, the others constitute a new firm, such new firm is not liable for the old firm's debts. Hence, in the absence of an assumption of such debts, a creditor of the old firm cannot prove his claim in bankruptcy against the new firm.^{194b}

(5) ASSUMPTION OF INDIVIDUAL DEBTS.—Where debts of an individual member of the firm are assumed by the firm, and sufficient consideration is shown to support the assumption, such debts may become partnership debts.¹⁹⁵ Where the creditor had no notice of the assumption of the individual debt by the partnership and did not acquiesce therein, the character of the debt remains unchanged.¹⁹⁶

f. Proof against and dividends from each estate.—Since the act of 1861, in England, joint and several creditors have been permitted to prove against and receive dividends from both joint and separate estates.¹⁹⁷ The weight of American authority has always been in favor of this rule.¹⁹⁸ Though at first glance this rule seems inequitable, the firm and the individuals are separate entities and have made separate contracts and may, therefore, be held to the performance of them. It follows, therefore, that under certain circumstances there may be a joint and several liability on the part of the partners, in which case a creditor may file double proof, both against the partnership assets and against the individual assets of each partner.¹⁹⁹ Where notes or other obligations for a partnership debt are signed or assumed by the partnership, and by one or more of the partners individually, the debt is both joint and several, and may be proved both against the estates of the partnership and of the partners.²⁰⁰ This principle may not be carried to the extent of permitting double proof against the estates of the partnership and the partners, where the partnership in the course of firm business converted securities belonging

In this case the court said: "In England the old rule was that in administering the bankrupt laws of that country double proof against the partnership estate and the individual estate was not allowed. This rule has not been followed in this country and there is nothing in the bankruptcy act showing that this English rule was intended to be embodied in our act. IX. WHERE ONE OR MORE PARTNERS ARE SOLVENT.

a. In general.— Subsection h of this section provides that "In the event of one or more but not all of the members of a partnership being adjudged bankrupt, the partnership property shall not be administered in bankruptcy, unless by consent of the partner or partners not adjudged bankrupt;" in such case it is made the duty of the solvent partner to settle the partnership business and account for the interest of the partner adjudged bankrupt. This provision is new, but is declaratory of the practice under the former law. The subdivision contemplates a case where one or more, but not all, of the members of a partnership are adjudged bankrupt, while the partnership as such is not before the court.²⁰² This doctrine seems to spring from the fact that bankruptcy works a dissolution of the firm, and the solvent partner may, therefore, close up the business of the firm as if the bankrupt member were actually dead. The provision commanding expedition and an accounting to the trustee should also be noted.

b. Waiver of consent.— The right to administer is absolute, unless waived by the solvent partner.²⁰³ It would seem that, by allowing an adjudication of partnership bankruptcy, as by making no response when served with notice as provided in General Order VIII, or by failing to disclose the relation and knowingly permitting an adjudication, this right to administer will be deemed waived. It can also be waived by a writing or declaration to that effect.²⁰⁴ If he stands by without protest and allows the assets of the partnership to be taken into the custody and control of the bankruptcy court, he may be deemed to have given his consent.²⁰⁵ But his participation in the bankruptcy proceeding against his partner by the presentation of an alleged provable claim upon which he attempted to vote for a trustee will not constitute a waiver.²⁰⁶ members of a firm inducing claimants to purchase drafts may not be proven against the individual assets of the partners when a claim has been filed and allowed against the partnership upon the drafts as partnership obligations in contract, it not appearing that the claimants were creditors both of the partnership and of the individual members thereof. Schall v. Camors (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 41 Am. B. R. 76, 250 Fed. 6.

R. 698, 188 Fed. 611, the court said: "Where there are separate and distinct express contracts of the firm and of a copartner to pay a debt contracted by the firm, the right to prove against both estates may be conceded. If one dealing with a firm procures also the individual undertaking of a partner to answer for a firm debt, there are substantial reasons for permitting him to resort to both estates. An additional several contract of a partner is not implied from the firm transaction, but may be created by a distinct act of the copartner. As the conversion in the present case was by the firm in the course of firm business, as the actual participation of the partner is not proved, as there is no evidence that his individual estate benefited by the firm conversion . . . there is difficulty in finding any substantial ground to imply from the circumstances a separate contract of the partner, which corresponds to an express individual contract to answer for a firm debt." See also Schall v. Camors (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 41 Am. B. R. 76, 250 Fed. 6.

Where fraudulent representations were made by partners in the course of the partnership business, for the benefit of the firm and without benefit to the partners as individuals, no legal or equitable claim as against the individuals that might be deemed to arise out of it, by waiver of the tort or otherwise, can displace the equities of other creditors, recognized in the Bankruptcy Act, and put the claimant for such fraud in a position of equality with others who actually were creditors of the individual partners. Schall v. Camors (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 44 Am. B. R. 647, 40 Sup. Ct. 135.

Construction of Section 5 (h).—Sub-section h of Section 5 is not applicable to a cause where a partnership has been adjudged a bankrupt. It applies only where less than all of the members of the partnership, but not the partnership itself, have been so adjudged. Francis v. McNeal (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 26 Am. B. R. 535, 186 Fed. 481, 108 C. C. A. 459, affd. 228 U. S. 695, 30 Am. B. R. 244, 57 L. Ed. 1029;

c. Application and effect of subsection.—This subsection does not apply where the solvent partner retired shortly before the bankruptcy and holds the continuing partner's notes for his interest in the firm.²⁰⁷ It merely preserves to an existing solvent partner the right to administer the affairs of the partnership if he so desires; it has no application to a case where distinct proceedings are instituted against the individual members of a partnership but not against the partnership itself.²⁰⁸ The connection between subsections h and c should be noted. When construed together they provide in effect that when a partnership and one or more of the partners, but not all of them are adjudged bankrupt, those who are not so adjudged may administer the partnership property, and a fortiori their individual property, and the court may not do so without their consent, but, if the unadjudicated members consent, the court may administer the partnership property and their individual estates.²⁰⁹

^{209.} Rights of solvent partner.—In the case of In re Bertenshaw (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 19 Am. B. R. 577, 583, 157 Fed. 363, the court said: "These provisions thus interpreted are fair, just and reasonable. The solvent partner cannot in any event escape payment of the debts of the partnership. His individual property is subject to attachment, execution and to the processes of the law to satisfy them. He is more competent to manage the individual property and the property of his firm which he had the shrewdness and ability to accumulate, more competent to convert them into money and to apply them upon his obligations, than any trustee chosen by his creditors can be. He knows the property, its value, its availability for various uses, its market. He has a vital interest in securing the best price for it, and the fact that it is his property, that it is to be applied to his debts, gives him a preferential equity to apply it speedily and efficiently to the payment of his obligations. The opposite process would be unreasonable, unfair to those who have accumulated and preserved the property, and liable to much injustice." See also Matter of Solomon (D. C., N. Y.), 20 Am. B. R. 488, 163 Fed. 140; In re Junck & Balthazard (D. C., W. Va.), 22 Am. B. R. 298, 169 Fed. 481.

Right of firm trustee to administer separate estate of partner not separately adjudicated.—In an involuntary proceeding against a partnership which is unable to pay its debts in full even with separate estates of the partners, an adjudication against the partnership alone authorizes the administration of the separate estate of one of the partners by the trustee in bankruptcy of the firm, particularly where such partner has neither objected to the firm property being administered nor to failure to adjudicate him but on the contrary consents to turn over his property for administration. Francis v. McNeal, 228 U. S. 695, 30 Am. B. R. 244, 57 L. Ed. 1029, affg. 26 Am. B. R. 555, 186 Fed. 481, 108 C. O. A. 459. See also In re Samuels & Lesser (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 32 Am. B. R. 436, 215 Fed. 845, revg. 30 Am. B. R. 293, 207 Fed. 195.

Appointment of solvent members as trustee.—Where a partnership and two of its three members are insolvent and the third member, although solvent, consents to the administration of the firm and individual assets, section 5h of the Bankruptcy Act applies, and an adjudication against the firm and the two members thereof may be had, and all the assets administered in the bankruptcy court, and the solvent partner will be entitled to share in the administration and may be appointed trustee. Matter of Kobre et al. (D. C., N. Y.), 35 Am. B. R. 389, 264 Fed. 106.

V. Table of Cases on Exemptions under Present Law, 243.I. HISTORY AND CONSTITUTIONALITY.

a. History in general.—Ever since bankruptcy laws ceased to be essentially penal, allowances or exemptions to the bankrupt have been sanctioned by statute. The law takes his property from him and gives it to his creditors. Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence, however, has for nearly two centuries decreed either that the creditors shall make the bankrupt an allowance such as will keep him and his family from want until he can begin again, or else shall permit him to retain a specific sum to the same end. The former is at present the English method; the latter the American and Canadian. By § 64(2) of the English act of 1883 the trustee, with the permission of the committee of inspection, may from time to time make an allowance to the bankrupt for his support and that of his family. Formerly, the English bankrupt was given a certain proportion of his assets for the same purpose.¹

b. In the United States.—Our first law, besides exempting wearing apparel and beds and bedding (§ 18) and giving an allowance for the necessary support of the debtor and his family during the pendency of his proceeding (§ 53), allowed him a small percentage of the assets, with an upward limit as to the total, but on a sliding scale dependent on dividends paid to creditors. This, though generous, was at least uniform throughout the country. The law of 1841 was also uniform; under it (§ 3) wearing apparel, household furniture, and other necessary articles to the value of not over $300, were set aside by the assignee for the bankrupt. The law of 1867, as amended (R. S., § 5045), re-enacted the provisions of the previous law, though increasing the upward limit to $500, and, in addition, after exempting the arms and equipment of one who had served as a soldier, gave effect to the exemption laws of the States to such extent as such laws were more liberal than the bankruptcy law. From this latter idea, our present far-reaching clause on exemption sprang. In a country where trade is necessarily liquid, and, owing to our division into States, the dangers from diverse exemption laws great, by the express provision of the Federal statute, the State and not the Federal law determines what portion of his estate a bankrupt may retain. The law as to exemptions remains as originally passed. That the result is inequitable is as true as it is that a remedy in the nature of a uniform national exemption law is for the time impossible. Thus, to-day, in some States the law's allowance of bread money is the same as that under the law of 1841; in others, it is so large as often to exhaust the estate.

c. Constitutionality.—One ground of attack on the constitutionality of the bankruptcy law of 1867 was that it was not uniform as to exemptions. There was no authoritative determination of this question by the Supreme Court. The lower courts, however, almost without exception, held that the uniformity required by the constitution was geographical only, and that the law was uniform, though, in this particular, giving effect to the local statutes of the debtor's domicile.² The Supreme Court has already settled the question under the present law, by declaring that law constitutional in spite of its want of uniformity as to exemptions,³ and holding that the system is, in a constitutional sense, uniform throughout the United States, when the trustee takes in each State whatever would have been available to creditors if the bankrupt law had not been passed.⁴

II. JURISDICTION AND GENERAL RULES GOVERNING EXEMPTIONS.

a. In general.—It is the purpose of this subdivision to set forth the general principles as found in the numerous cases on the subject. For decisions under the laws of 1867 and 1841, resort should be had to the text books and digests of the periods.⁵

b. State statutes and decisions control.—The State law controls and its meaning is fixed by the interpretation of the highest courts of the State.⁶ It

4. Constitutionality of section as to exemptions.—The Supreme Court in the case of Hanover Nat. Bank v. Moyses, 186 U. S. 181, 8 Am. B. R. 1, 46 L. Ed. 1113, concurs in the view expressed by Chief Justice Waite in In re Deckert, 2 Hughes, 186, where he said: "The power to except from the operation of the law property liable to exception under the exemption laws of the several states, as they were actually enforced, was at one time questioned upon the ground that it was a violation of the constructional requirement of uniformity, but it has thus far been sustained for the reason that it was made a rule of the law to subject to the payment of debts under its operation only such property as could by judicial process be made available for the same purpose. This is not unjust, as every debt is contracted with reference to the rights of the parties thereto under existing exemption laws, and no creditor can reasonably complain if he gets his full share of all that the law, for the time being, places at the disposal of creditors. One of the effects of a bankrupt law is that of a general execution issued in favor of all the creditors of the bankrupt, reaching all his property subject to levy, and applying it to the payment of all his debts according to their respective priorities. It is quite proper, therefore, to confine its operation to such property as other legal process could reach. A rule which operates to this effect throughout the United States is uniform within the meaning of that term as used in the Constitution."

has always been the policy of Congress, both in general legislation and in bankrupt acts, to give effect to the State exemption laws.⁷ But a court of bankruptcy will not enforce an unconstitutional State law;⁸ for example, where it impairs the obligation of contracts.⁹ Nor will a State court review a determination by the bankruptcy court as to what property is exempt.¹⁰ But if there are no State decisions construing a State law, or such decisions are conflicting, a court of bankruptcy will, if a proper case is presented, construe and apply the law with a view of carrying out the purpose and intent of the bankruptcy act.¹¹ Exemption laws should be liberally construed.¹² If the decisions are interpretations of State statutes they will control; but if they are declarations of general law — mere definitions of property — they may be disregarded.¹³

The construction of the highest judicial tribunal of a State of its constitution and of its statutes which establish a rule of property, is controlling authority in the courts of the United States, where no question of right under the constitution and laws of the nation is involved. In re Wood (D. C., Wis.), 17 Am. B. R. 93, 147 Fed. 877. It is well settled that the debtor must comply with the State law in order to claim exemptions. In re Farish, Fed. Cas. 4,657, 2 N. B. Decisions of territorial courts. — How far the decision of the Supreme Court of the territory is binding on this court may admit of question; but it would seem that the decision of the highest court of the Territory construing a territorial statute should have the same force and effect as a decision of the Supreme Court of the State. This is especially true where the decision establishes or relates to a rule of property. In re Scheir (D. C., Wash.), 26 Am. B. R. 730, 188 Fed. 744.

Force of State exemption laws. — From the organization of the Federal courts under the judiciary act of 1789, the law has been that creditors suing in these courts could not subject to execution property of their debtor, exempt to him by the laws of the State. The same rule has obtained under the bankrupt acts, which have sometimes increased the exemptions, notably so under the act of 1867, but have never lessened or diminished them. An intention on the part of Congress to violate or abolish this wise and uniform rule observed from the creation of our Federal system should be made to appear by clear and unmistakable language. It will not be presumed from a doubtful or ambiguous provision fairly susceptible of any other construction. Steele v. Buel (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 5 Am. B. R. 100, 104 Fed. 972.

The Bankruptcy Act does not create any personal or homestead exemptions in favor of the bankrupt, but merely preserves to him the full benefit of such exemptions as at the time of adjudication he is entitled to under the State law. c. Residence of bankrupt.—The section provides that the laws of the State where the bankrupt had his domicile “for the six months or the greater portion thereof immediately preceding the filing of the petition” shall control.¹⁴ It makes no difference where the property is situated, if it is exempt under the law of the bankrupt’s domicile.¹⁵ The right of the bankrupt to his exemption will depend upon his place of residence at the time the petition is filed against him.¹⁶

d. Claiming exemption.—The time and manner of claiming exemptions are regulated by the bankruptcy act, and the general orders and forms applicable thereto.¹⁷ Where the right exists it must be claimed as prescribed by the act.¹⁸ It was not the intent of the section to enlarge the exemptions available to the bankrupt under the State law; ¹⁹ if exempt property is not subject to levy and sale under a State statute, it cannot be made to respond under the Federal act.²⁰

e. Jurisdiction of court of bankruptcy.—(1) IN GENERAL.—A court of bankruptcy has jurisdiction to determine the merits of the bankrupt’s claim to exemptions, but, as a rule, has no jurisdiction over the property claimed, except to set it aside for his use²¹ and cannot order its sale,²² or enforce a Control ceases on setting apart exempt property.—In the case of Lockwood v. Exchange Bank, 190 U. S. 294, 10 Am. B. R. 107, 47 L. Ed. 1061, the court said: "The fact that the Act of 1898 confers upon the court of bankruptcy authority to control exempt property, in order to set aside and thus exclude it from the assets of the bankrupt estate to be administered, offers no ground for holding that the court of bankruptcy must administer and distribute, as included in the assets of the estate, the very property which the act in unambiguous language declares shall not pass from the bankrupt or become part of the bankrupt assets. The two provisions of the statute must be construed together and both be given effect. Moreover, the want of power in the court of bankruptcy to administer exempt property, is shown by the context of the act, since throughout its text exempt property is contrasted with property not exempt, the latter alone constituting the assets of the bankrupt estate subject to administration."

The bankruptcy court may exercise jurisdiction over exempt property only to the extent necessary to see that the trustee sets it aside and to dispose of such questions as may arise incident to that process. In re Jackson (D. C., Pa.), 8 Am. B. R. 594, 116 Fed. 46. The language in section 6, together with that used in 70-a, leaves no room to doubt that exempt property which has been set apart to the bankrupt is not subject to administration by the trustee or by a court of bankruptcy. Woodruff v. Cheeves (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 5 Am. B. R. 296, 105 Fed. 601; In re Remmerde (D. C., Iowa), 30 Am. B. R. 701, 206 Fed. 826.

Jurisdiction of bankruptcy court over exempt property.—The action of the trustee in bankruptcy in setting apart to the bankrupt property exempt under the State law may be excepted to and the propriety of his and undivided from other property of the bankrupt estate, the bankruptcy court retains jurisdiction of the property until separation is made.²⁷ A court of bankruptcy has no jurisdiction to protect or enforce against exempt property, which has been set apart to the bankrupt liens or other rights of creditors pertaining to such property.²⁸ It cannot enforce even an admitted lien on exempt property,²⁹ or defend such property from adverse claims that may or may not be extinguished by the bankruptcy proceedings.³⁰ Until the bankrupt has established what, if any, of the property belongs to him as exempt, freed from the claim of his trustee in bankruptcy, he is in no position to maintain trover in the State court for the conversion of such property.³¹

(3) EXEMPT PROPERTY NO PART OF BANKRUPT ESTATE.—The cases already cited lead to the conclusion that property set apart to a bankrupt under his claim to exemption forms no part of his estate in bankruptcy.³² Having set

action, either as to whether the exemption was lawful or whether too little of the property of the bankrupt has been set apart is open to final determination by the bankruptcy court; but after the property is set apart as exempt neither the trustee nor the bankruptcy court has any further authority over it. Matter of Cheatham (D. Title to exempt property.—Exempt property does not constitute any part of the estate in bankruptcy. Exemptions are created by the State law, and the function of the bankruptcy court is to sever the property found to be an exemption from the estate of the bankrupt, the title remaining in the bankrupt. Matter of Elkin (D. Right of bankrupt to assign exemptions prior to expiration of time to file exceptions.

—As soon as property is set aside to a bankrupt he has an assignable interest therein and he may assign the property in good faith, for application to pre-existing debts, although the assignment is made before the expiration of the twenty days allowed, under General Order No. 17, within which to file exceptions. *Taylor v. statute, never passes to the trustee in bankruptcy of the husband.³³ The fact that property was subject to certain claims of creditors, does not make such property assets, to pass to the trustee and to be administered by him with the other assets of the estate.³³

(4) DETERMINATION AS TO WAIVER OF CLAIM.—The jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court to determine a claim that the bankrupt has waived his exemption has been declared in a number of cases, notwithstanding the principles hereinbefore annunciated.⁴⁰ As the law now stands, however, the court of bankruptcy has no jurisdiction, save by consent, to determine the claim of a creditor under a waiver contained in a note or other instrument; such creditor must pursue his remedy in the State courts.⁴¹ This principle may not be applied to its full extent in a case where the question of the validity or priority of a lien on both exempt and nonexempt property is involved.⁴²

This is not an ordinary claim of exemption. The trustee, it is true, is seeking to obtain exempt property, but the trouble with his claim is that he has no title to the property he seeks to hold. That, of course, ends his contention. The property is not only exempt, but never passed to him and is not his. The statute, while in the nature of the exemption law, is more than that; it declares that this property shall inure to the separate benefit of the wife. Ordinary exemption laws leave the full right and title to the property in the debtor."

Jurisdiction in respect to waive-notes.—A Federal trustee in bankruptcy is not entitled to the bankrupt's exemption against a creditor who has attached the same by an attachment execution issued and served within four months prior to bankruptcy on a judgment waiving exemption. Sharp v. Woolshire, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 251, 12 Am. B. R. 396. Money allowed a bankrupt "in lieu of his exemption" may be attached in the hands of the trustee on a judgment rendered against a bankrupt on a note wherein the bankrupt waived his exemption. Zumpfe v. Schultz, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 106, 20 Am. B. R. 916. In the case of In re Edwards (D. C., Ala.), 19 Am. B. R. 632, 156 Fed. 794, it was held that a bankruptcy court had no jurisdiction to compel the return of money received by a judgment creditor as the proceeds of an execution sale of exempt property under a judgment on a promissory note secured prior to adjudication in which note the bankrupt waived all claim of exemption.

A judgment creditor of a bankrupt, who holds a waiver of exemption, may have the sheriff levy upon and sell the exempt property of the bankrupt at any time before his final discharge. First Nat. Bank v. Bartlett (Sup. Ct., Pa.), 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 593, 21 Am. B. R. 88.

The amendment of 1910 to section 47a (3) of the bankruptcy act does not affect the provision of section 6, in which the intention of Congress is plainly expressed, that the bankruptcy act shall not affect the allowance to bankrupts of the exemptions which are prescribed by State laws. *Brandt v. (5) JURISDICTION IN RESPECT TO EXEMPT PROPERTY AND CLAIMS THEREON.

— When the exemption has been set apart by the trustee, and he has reported it to the court for its approval, and when approved and the bankrupt's right to it has been finally determined, the property embraced in the exemption ceases to be a part of the assets to be administered by the court in connection with the bankrupt's estate, and the bankrupt court would have no jurisdiction to entertain a plenary suit in equity by a creditor of the bankrupt to reach and subject such exempt property to his claim.⁴³ So where property claimed to be exempt is attached in a State court, such property may be held under the attachment until it is determined in bankruptcy proceedings what part of the attached property has passed to the trustee, freed from the claim of exemption,⁴⁴ and the court may not restrain the suit in which the property was attached; nor determine whether such property was within a waiver contract which is the subject of the suit.⁴⁵ A voluntary bankrupt cannot abandon his bankruptcy proceeding after receiving all of his property as an exemption, and prevent his creditor from procuring that property, where he does not have the exemption allowed in the bankruptcy court set apart as a homestead in the State court.⁴⁶ Where after a court of bankruptcy has set apart to a bankrupt his exemptions, including a note due the bankrupt, the trustee, without authority, "by mistake or oversight," as he claims, proceeds to collect it, the State court has jurisdiction of a garnishment proceeding by a judgment creditor of the bankrupt against the trustee.⁴⁷ Prior to Bardes v. Bank,⁴⁸ it was thought in some districts that the still more general power conferred on courts of bankruptcy to "determine controversies" gave the Federal courts jurisdiction to pass on the validity of liens on the exempt property; that case, however, clearly negated such a view.⁴⁹ And it has not been superseded by the amendment of § 23-b,⁵⁰ which even now has only to do with suits to recover property.⁵¹

f. Trustees; rights and duties.— The rights and duties of trustees in respect to exemptions of bankrupts are indicated in § 47-a (11) as supplemented by General Order XVII.⁵² In brief, if the bankrupt has duly asserted his claim to exemptions,⁵³ the trustee must estimate and determine the value of the Liability to execution of property exempted in bankruptcy but not set aside by State court.— A bankrupt on his own petition was adjudicated a bankrupt, and had all of his property, consisting of a stock of merchandise, exempted in bankruptcy. The property was turned over to the bankrupt, who did not have it set apart as a homestead to him and his family in the State court. More than three years after the adjudication in bankruptcy, and after the exemption of the property in the bankruptcy court, a creditor whose claim was listed in the bankruptcy application brought suit on his claim. There was no plea or suggestion of bankruptcy.

The suit eventuated in a judgment, and an execution based thereon was levied on the property exempted in the bankruptcy court, and a claim was interposed by the bankrupt as head of the family. No discharge has been granted to the bankrupt. Held, that the property is subject to the fi. fa. Baltimore Bargain House v. Busby (Ga. Sup. Ct.), 143 Ga. 734, 35 Am. B. R. 119, 85 S. E. 875.

exemptions claimed,⁵⁴ and make an itemized report setting them off, within twenty days,⁵⁵ whereupon any creditor⁵⁶ may except, and the exceptions will be argued before the referee. It has been held that the trustee may set apart the bankrupt's exemption as a ministerial act and then except to the allowance of the claim under General Order XVII.⁵⁷ Since he has no title, he may not retain exempt property and deprive the bankrupt of his exemption on the ground that assets have been withheld.⁵⁸ The right of exemption will depend upon conditions existing at the time the petition in bankruptcy is filed.⁵⁹ The trustee has no title to the exempt property of the bankrupt, but it remains in the bankrupt. Where property has been set off to the bankrupt as a homestead it cannot be sold by the bankruptcy court, nor has a trustee any equity therein that can be made the subject of sale.⁶⁰ Appraisers cannot therefore fix the value of the exemptions claimed;⁶¹ their services will, however, often be availed of by the trustee. Indeed, this practice is sometimes sanctioned by district rules. Until the exemptions are fixed, the trustee has the right to possession of the property claimed, and the bankrupt will not be allowed compensation for caring for it.⁶² The trustee may not deduct therefrom the costs and expenses incurred by the bankrupt prior to bankruptcy, on account of the bankruptcy proceedings.⁶³ As soon as the claim is determined in favor of the bankrupt, the trustee should at once surrender possession, for an exemption is a matter of right and the trustee may not withhold it from him.⁶⁴ The duties imposed upon the trustee in respect to the allotment of exemption may not be neglected, or their discharge postponed until an issue of fraud in regard to the disposition of the property is determined.⁶⁵ A trustee may, however, retain possession of the fund which has been allowed to the bankrupt as an exemption for a reasonable time, so as to give opportunity to creditors claiming liens against the fund to take steps to enforce such liens.⁶⁶ The mere act of the

To set apart exempt property.—One of the first concerns of the trustee should always be promptly to set aside to the bankrupt any exempt property. Matter of Brown (D. C., Ky.), 35 Am. B. R. 826, 228 Fed. 533. It is the duty of the trustee in bankruptcy to set apart the bankrupt's exemptions from his property as soon as practicable, but it is improper where the bankrupt's goods have been sold for about twenty-five per cent. of their invoice to pay $500 in cash from this amount on account of exemptions, thus absorbing about $2,000 of the invoice value of the property. Matter of Shrimer (D. R. 732, the court said: "The exemption being in cash, and it appearing that there will be creditors with claims which they will desire an opportunity to enforce against the fund, notwithstanding its being set apart as an exemption under the constitution and laws of Georgia, the fund will be held by the trustee for a reasonable time, to give opportunity to creditors

trustee in setting apart exempt property has not been given the force of an adjudication. He is required to report the items of exempt property, with the estimated values thereof, to the court. This report may be contested, and, as between the creditor and the bankrupt, does not become final and conclusive until the court shall have acted thereon.⁶⁷ The requirements of the State law in respect to claiming the exemption must be complied with, or the property will pass to the trustee freed from the exemption.⁶⁸ But where the bankrupt made claim to a share of the proceeds of the sale of a homestead prior to the approval by the State court, it was held that he had not waived his rights to the exemption.⁶⁹ Where a bankrupt has clearly indicated his intention not to waive his exemption, and has also specified the particular class of property owned by him, from which he claims his exemption, it then becomes the duty of the trustee to select and sever the exemption from the mass of property, belonging to the estate, of the character and the class indicated.⁷⁰ Where a trustee in good faith sells all the bankrupt's property, including the articles which a bankrupt has claimed as exempt, upon the assumption that the property would bring a better price when sold as a whole than when sold in parcels, he is justified in turning over to the bankrupt or his assignee the full amount allowed as an exemption by the State law.⁷¹

III. RIGHT OF BANKRUPT TO EXEMPTIONS.

a. Domicile; time and place.—Domicile as used in this section means what it would mean were the question one affecting jurisdiction to adjudge.⁷² Thus, the law of the domicile may be different from the law of the forum; as, where the place of business is in one State and the residence in another. Domicile usually connotes personal presence in a fixed and permanent abode.⁷³ A person must have a legal domicile,⁷⁴ and the old one always remains until a new one is acquired.⁷⁵ Where a man leaves his family to avoid arrest his domicile does not change.⁷⁶ The domicile of a corporation is in the State of its organization, and cannot be changed.⁷⁷ The burden of proving a change of domicile by the bankrupt lies unquestionably upon the party who asserts the change.⁷⁸ The time of residence, both as to existing State statutes and the property claimed, is the time when, under the statute, he is required to assert his claim of exemption.⁷⁹ His right to such exemptions as are permitted by State laws, is referable to the condition of things as they existed at the time of the filing of the petition.⁸⁰

b. Assertion of claim.—(1) NECESSITY OF ASSERTION.—While an exemption is a matter of right,⁸¹ it, being personal to the bankrupt, must be asserted or he will be deemed to have waived it.⁸² What he does not claim for himself and his family, he leaves in the general fund for distribution.⁸³

(2) COMPLIANCE WITH STATE STATUTE.—Whether an exemption is a mere personal privilege which must be claimed by the bankrupt, or is a property interest accruing from the statute itself, will determine the necessity of claiming the exemption. If the exemption is of the former class it must be asserted with the formality required by the State statute; if it is of the latter class, the statute executes itself.⁸⁴ This only pertains to the necessity of complying

And until it is, and specific property has been set off under it, the court has full authority to consider and dispose of what is involved. with the provisions of the State statute relative to asserting a claim of exemption.⁸⁵

(3) TIME OF ASSERTION.—He must assert his claim to exemptions in a court of bankruptcy before his discharge,⁸⁶ and he will not be entitled to such a claim in a State court after his discharge.⁸⁷ It has been held that he may claim his exemptions at any time before the sale of the property.⁸⁸ An extension of the time for filing a bankrupt's schedules extends his time to claim his exemption.⁸⁹

(4) MANNER OF ASSERTION.—If a voluntary bankrupt, he should assert it in the first instance in Schedule B (5) attached to his petition; if an involuntary bankrupt, in the same schedule when filed after his adjudication.⁹⁰ If the claim of the bankrupt as contained in his schedules, does not describe or designate any particular property, such claim is invalid.⁹¹ But under a State statute allowing a certain sum in lieu of homestead, a claim need not specify articles amounting to the sum allowed, but may ask for a deduction to that amount from a stock of merchandise or its equivalent in cash out of the proceeds of the estate.⁹² A claim for exemption is sufficient if made generally under the State exemption laws, and it is not necessary to refer precisely to a particular statute.^{92a} The manner in which the claim for exemption shall be made is a mere matter of procedure, and, as in other cases, amendments may be allowed to effect justice between the parties.⁹³

The proper time to claim an exemption is at the time the bankrupt's schedules are filed. In a voluntary case it should be a part of the schedules accompanying the application, and in an involuntary case it should be made at the time he filed his schedule. Matter of Webb (D. A bankrupt's schedules must contain his claim to exemptions, and the trustee must set them apart and report to the court. Whether a specific item of property shall go to creditors or be reserved by the bankrupt, as exempt, is not for him to constitute himself the judge; but it is his duty to disclose the transaction, that the bankruptcy court may determine the right. Matter of Brincab (D. C., Ala.), 37 Am. B. R. 587, 233 Fed. 811. See Am. Bankr. Dig., § 986.

When bankrupt need not itemize claim in schedules.—Where a bankrupt owns personal property of a value less than the amount to which he is entitled as an exemption, he need not file with his schedules an itemized list of the property claimed by him as exempt. This because he is entitled to all the property. Matter of Ziff (D. C., Ala.), 35 Am. B. R. 83, 225 Fed. 323.

waive his right to exemptions is well settled,⁹⁴ and a waiver may arise either from the bankrupt's failure to claim exemptions,⁹⁵ or by a general⁹⁶ or specific surrender of them. If the latter, the usual method is by a waive-note. In such cases, the waiver is personal to the creditor thus favored, and, if not asserted by him, inures to the benefit of the bankrupt.⁹⁷ A waiver cannot inure to the benefit of a general creditor.⁹⁸ A bankrupt is not entitled to an exemption in the proceeds arising from the sale of property over the objection of a creditor, where more than four months before filing his petition in bankruptcy, he gave a note and mortgage to secure the creditor's claim, containing an express waiver of his homestead exemptions.⁹⁹ But a bankrupt may assert his right against a seeming but not actual waiver prior to the bankruptcy.¹⁰⁰ If a note containing a waiver is void for usury or other cause, the bankrupt's exemption is not affected, and a judgment for the amount of such note may not be enforced against exempt property.¹⁰¹ A waiver of homestead rights in favor of all creditors cannot be worked out through a waiver made to one creditor only, nor can the latter form of waiver entitle all creditors to a right to marshal securities or funds.¹⁰²

Waiver by chattel mortgage.—Since under section 1391 of the New York Code of Civil Procedure, an election is necessary in order to have the exemption applied where the property mentioned exceeds $250 in value, a bankrupt waives his right of exemption as to all such property mentioned and described in chattel mortgages executed by him, and it is immaterial that one of the mortgages was executed more than four months before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy. Matter of French (D. C., N. Y.), 37 Am. B. R. 289, 231 Fed. 255.

Waiver contained in financial statement.—Where a person on a request for a financial statement furnished the same, together with a waiver of homestead and exemptions, and partly on the faith of such waiver the creditor accepted an order for goods which he thereafter delivered, the waiver of homestead was held to be contemporaneous with the offer to buy and its acceptance and was a valid contract of waiver. *Pincus v. 102. A waiver of exemption rights contained in a mortgage of real property is solely for the benefit of the mortgagee and for the security of his debt alone. Where a mortgagor waives his exemptions the mortgagee is not thereby confined, in case of bankruptcy of the mortgagor, to enforcing his security against the exemption only but may enforce his mortgage against the entire property. Matter of Brown (D. C., Ky.), 35 Am. B. R. 826, 228 Fed. 533.

(2) EFFECT OF WAIVER.—If a bankrupt waives his claim to an exemption he thereby leaves the property and the proceeds thereof in the general fund for distribution among the general creditors.¹⁰³ An execution creditor whose judgment is based upon a waiver of exemption may not proceed by execution against the property of the bankrupt where the bankrupt has waived his exemption and the property has not been set off to him as exempt; the exemption having been waived the property passes to the trustee to be administered for the benefit of all the bankrupt's creditors.¹⁰⁴ But it has been held that a bankrupt who has, under a State statute authorizing it, transferred his claim of exemption as security for a debt and therein authorized the transferee to select the exempt property, may not defeat the transfer by an express waiver of exemption in his petition for adjudication in bankruptcy.¹⁰⁵

(3) EFFECT OF WAIVE-NOTE.—The fact that a bankrupt has given a waive-note does not affect his right to have his exempt property set apart.¹⁰⁶ The decisions are not uniform as to the remedy of a creditor holding a waive-note.¹⁰⁷ It has been held that the claim may not be asserted until the note is reduced to judgment;¹⁰⁸ also that such a creditor must look to the exempt property before asserting his claim against the general estate.¹⁰⁹

(4) WITHHOLDING DISCHARGE.—The bankrupt's discharge should be withheld until a creditor claiming under a waiver has had time to resort to remedies allowable in State courts.¹¹⁰ Exempt property, or the proceeds thereof, do not

104. Right of execution creditor holding waiver.—In the case of In re Baughman (D. C., Pa.), 25 Am. B. R. 167, 183 Fed. 668, it appeared that at the time the petition in bankruptcy was filed, the goods of the bankrupt were under levy by the sheriff on an execution in which the $300 State exemption was waived. The bankrupt amended his schedules by withdrawing the claim therein made. The court said: "The claim of the bankrupt, as made in his schedules, was invalid, no particular property having been designated or set out. And while this was amendable, it was insufficient as it stood, and without amendment was not in shape to be allowed. But instead of amending the claim the bankrupt abandoned it, after which it was the same as if it had never been made. The execution creditor could not prevent this. He had no right by virtue of his waiver to proceed against the goods of the bankrupt which he had seized, even though they amounted to less than the law allowed; but only against the specific property, within that amount, which the bankrupt selected and had set off to him; and this designation never having been made, and all that was done by the bankrupt in that connection having been recalled, the execution creditor was left without anything on which his writ could take effect. . . . It may be that, by withdrawal of the claim, he was able to defeat the waiver. But however it may stand under the state law, there is no particular reason in bankruptcy why a waiver should be favored. The $300 exemption is allowed to the unfortunate debtor for the benefit of himself and his dependent family. And if he is authorized to waive the right to it in favor of one creditor over others, he certainly is authorized to make no claim to it after bankruptcy, so that all may fare alike." belong to the creditors, nor may the trustee recover the same for their benefit.¹¹¹ But it has been held that an opportunity should be given to creditors to enforce their debts or liens against the exempt property in a court of competent jurisdiction, and in the meantime the bankrupt's discharge may be withheld.¹¹² The creditor has an equity entitling him to a reasonable postponement of the discharge of the bankrupt to enable him to bring such proceedings in the State court as may be necessary to assert his rights.¹¹³ Where the exempt property consists of money in the hands of the trustee, the bankruptcy court will hold the fund, until it can be placed where it will be available to the benefit of parties in interest.¹¹⁴ If the discharge is not withheld it will operate as a release of the debt and bar a proceeding based thereon against the exempt property.¹¹⁵

E. 174, the court said: "Nor does the bankruptcy act prevent the creditor from enforcing a lien superior to the exemption under the state law, if such lien be fastened on the exempt property at any period of the bankruptcy proceedings prior to the final discharge of the debtor. But if the debtor succeeds in obtaining his discharge and pleads it prior to the fastening of a specific lien on such property, the effect is to release the debtor from the payment of the debt upon which the proceedings are based, and the creditor's right of action is destroyed." Purchaser at mortgage foreclosure.—Exemptions in stock in trade, tools and fixtures are personal and cannot be claimed by a purchaser on the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage covering such property and constituting a voidable preference. Feilbach Co. v. Russell (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 37 Am. B. R. 285, 233 Fed. 412.

119. Assignment of exemptions as security.—In the case of In re Hastings (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 24 Am. B. R. 360, 181 Fed. 33, it appeared that the bankrupt had mortgaged all his exempt property, then transfer exempt property prior to his bankruptcy, regardless of a present indebtedness, and his wife, not as the head of the family, but as vendee, is entitled to the protection which the exemption laws would have afforded the husband had he retained the property; and such property cannot be recovered by the trustee in bankruptcy of the husband.¹²⁰ Where by State statute a bankrupt's claim of exemption is not assignable, an attempted assignment operates as an abandonment of the right.¹²¹ In Pennsylvania a debtor may waive but not assign his right to exemptions and will not be permitted to withdraw a waiver thereof in favor of a creditor to whom he had assigned his claim.¹²² The bankrupt may claim his exemption through his attorney or agent, if within the statute under which it exists.¹²³ A voluntary bankrupt may not retain his exemption as against the actual and necessary costs of the bankruptcy proceeding, notwithstanding his affidavit of inability to pay.¹²⁴

(2) CLAIM BY OR FOR BENEFIT OF WIFE OR CHILDREN.—An exemption may be claimed by the bankrupt's wife and children, when the State law permits it,¹²⁵ the law being intended as much to protect them as the husband. Thus, the husband cannot deprive the family of the right to an exempt homestead merely by absconding, so long as he leaves his family in it.¹²⁶ The right to an exemption accrues when the proceedings are instituted against the bankrupt, and if he subsequently dies before the exempt property is set apart to him, his administrator will take such property, and if authorized by the State law, it may be administered for the benefit of his widow and children; it would seem to reasonably follow that in such a case the exemption may properly be claimed for their benefit.¹²⁷ If the exemption accrues by the State law to the benefit of husband and wife and the children, a failure to assert the claim by the husband in bankruptcy should not deprive the wife and children of the benefits of the law, and their right will be protected by the bankruptcy court;¹²⁸ but the wife in such case will be required to exercise the same degree of diligence in making her claims as the bankrupt.¹²⁹ Under the laws of Ohio, a divorced owned or thereafter to be acquired by him, and had vested in the mortgagee the privilege of selecting the exempt property covered by the mortgage; it was held that it could not be said that the delegation of the right to select exempt property was against public policy and void, since, under the Michigan statute, the selection is permitted to be made by the debtor "or his authorized agent," and the authority to select, given upon a valuable consideration and coupled with an interest, could not be revoked by the failure of the bankrupt to claim the exemptions in his own name, or even by his express waiver thereof, the assignor being estopped so to do.

woman who has the care of her own children, is entitled to an exemption in real estate, in lieu of a homestead.¹³⁰

(3) HOUSEHOLDER OR HEAD OF A FAMILY.—As to the meaning of "householder" and "head of a family," as used in State statutes, distinctions are frequently made which seem to have no difference.¹³¹ A married woman doing business in her own name, and living with her husband, is not the head of a family and as such entitled to a householder's exemption.¹³² But the wife of a bankrupt who has deserted her, or has separated and is living apart, may be the "head of a family" so as to entitle her to exemptions.¹³³ But if the husband is in fact the support of the family the wife is not a "householder" and entitled to a homestead exemption;¹³⁴ but it has been held otherwise where the wife owned the fee and carried on business in her own name.¹³⁵ And an unmarried woman, having the actual care and support of her aged and infirm paternal grandmother, may be entitled to an exemption in kind;¹³⁶ so also as to a widower who maintains a homestead for his family consisting of three minor children and his mother-in-law.¹³⁷ An unmarried bankrupt living alone is not entitled to a homestead exemption as a "head of a family," because he pays the board and tuition of his sister at a boarding school whose home was with her parents.¹³⁸ Under a statute giving an exemption to a person having the care or support of dependent females, a bankrupt son who lives alone with his mother is entitled to a homestead exemption although she is not solely dependent upon him in a financial sense.¹³⁹

(4) CLAIM OF PARTNERS.—Whether the members of a bankrupt firm can claim exemptions from its partnership assets depends on the decisions of the State courts.¹⁴⁰ Thus, in certain States where partners are allowed exemptions out of the firm property, the bankruptcy courts have granted similar exemptions.¹⁴¹ On principle, they cannot claim exemptions therefrom, the partnership being an entity, and the partners having no interest in the assets until all Right of partner to exemption.—In the case of Jennings v. Stannus & Son (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 27 Am. B. R. 384, 386, 191 Fed. 347, the court says: "The strong reason in support of this view rests upon the innate difference between the individual and a copartnership as it relates to their respective property rights. Each is a distinct entity. The former holds, by the exclusive right, subject only to the right of his creditors to have his property applied to their legitimate demands. Exemption statutes are enacted to meet this express condition, to relieve the debtor in a measure against the demands of his creditors, that he may yet enjoy the necessary comforts of life. The latter holds by right of the individual members, whose respective interests in the property depend upon mutual agreement between them; the whole being subject to the debts of the firm. The individual interest in the partnership property is joint, and each partner has the right to have the property applied first to the partnership debts before either is entitled to a segregation of his own interest. Levy and execution, it is true, may proceed against the individual interest; but, when made, the sale is of the interest subject to the debts of the concern, and a settlement of the copartnership affairs is necessary in the end to determine what the purchaser has really acquired. So that it seems illogical to say that exemption in favor of a partner is within the purview of the statute, unless specially mentioned and declared. *Pond v. Right of partner to claim exemptions out of partnership property.—By the great weight of authority individual partners cannot claim exemptions in the partnership property as against a partnership debt. This is held on different grounds: (1) On the well-known ground that partnership property is subject to the payment of partnership debts before all other claims; (2) the impracticability or even inequity of allowing an exemption out of the property; (3) that, under the theory of the civil law that a partnership is an entity—a theory not generally recognized by the common law and one which is inconsistent with its principles—and that the partnership property does not belong to the individual partners, but to the firm, that is, to the legal entity; (4) that the different exemption statutes contemplate only individuals and have no reference to partnerships. 18 Cyc. 1383.

A different rule obtains in Georgia, Michigan, North Carolina, New York, Wisconsin and perhaps one or two other States; but claims may be asserted, if each partner shall consent thereto,¹⁴⁴ especially where there are no individual estates from which exemptions may be taken.¹⁴⁵ Even where exemptions are permitted out of partnership assets, it must appear that the partner seeking the exemption had an interest in such assets to the extent and the amount of the exemption sought.¹⁴⁶ It has been held that, fraud being absent, partners may before bankruptcy so sever the joint estate as to permit each of them to claim their exemptions, though on appeal this severance was not approved or even thought necessary.¹⁴⁷ But where there is no transfer, the Federal courts sitting in bankruptcy have never adopted or followed the minority rule outside of the particular States in which that rule prevails. In re Scheier (D. C., Wash.), 26 Am. B. R. 739, 188 Fed. 744.

Extent of exemption.—In the case of In re Camp (D. C., Ga.), 1 Am. B. R. 165, 91 Fed. 745, it is said: "But conceding, in view of what has been stated, that the bankrupt court, sitting in Georgia, and passing upon an exemption of a citizen of Georgia, would feel bound to allow an exemption to one partner out of the partnership assets, it is nevertheless perfectly clear that the partner seeking the exemption should have an interest in the partnership assets to the extent and the amount of the exemption sought. If, on an accounting between the partners, the partner applying for an exemption would have no interest in the partnership effects as against the other partners,

Payment from assets of dissolved partnership.—Bankrupt and his partner, fourteen days before bankruptcy, severed the partnership relation by written agreement whereby the assets of the dissolved partnership were vested in bankrupt and its liabilities assumed by him. There was no fraud in the transaction, and during the period preceding bankruptcy, bankrupt continued the business in his own name. The liabilities in the bankruptcy proceedings consisted of firm debts, and the assets those which were assigned to bankrupt under the dissolution agreement. Nothing appeared as to the insolvency of the firm at its dissolution, nor concerning the state of accounts between the partners. Held, that the firm assets were validly transformed into individual assets of bankrupt, so as to entitle him to be allowed his exemptions therefrom. In re Kolber (D. C., Pa.), 27 Am. B. R. 414, 193 Fed. 281.

Rule in Indiana.—Where members of a firm, all residents of Indiana, with knowledge of insolvency consented to a dissolution for the express purpose of enabling each of them to claim exemptions, and the firm property was divided among them, and thereafter one of them filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy and an involuntary petition was filed to have the firm adjudged bankrupt, no exemptions can be claimed out of the property in the hands of the trustee, and specifically identified as part of the former firm property, because in Indiana no exemptions are allowed out of partnership assets. Firm property in the possession of a partner at the time of the filing of a petition in bankruptcy must be deemed firm and not individual assets for all purposes. Matter of Turnock & Sons (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 36 Am. B. R. 316, 230 Fed. 985.

Conversion of firm property into exempt property.—As it is not fraudulent for an individual debtor to convert property which is not exempt into that which is, it is not fraudulent for individuals constituting a partnership to sever the joint interest in partnership property, which is not yet in the custody of the law, and thereafter to hold their exemptions out of such property. Crawford v.

but a mere abandonment by one partner of his interest, an exemption will not be allowed out of partnership assets to the other member of the firm.¹⁴⁸ Where a partner has parted with his interest in the assets of the firm prior to bankruptcy, he cannot claim an exemption therein, although he continued in the employ of the firm as a clerk.¹⁴⁹ Where the right to a homestead exemption out of partnership assets is doubtful, the claim must be asserted reasonably and in conformity with the practice in bankruptcy, or it will not be considered.¹⁵⁰ An infant who, although he contributed to the capital stock of a partnership, assented to being ignored in all firm transactions, is not entitled to a personal property exemption out of the assets of the firm.¹⁵¹ Several of the cases cited in the foot-notes under this paragraph contain summaries of decisions both in the Federal and in the highest State courts, in particular In re Camp.¹⁵²

(5) EXEMPTIONS TO PERSONS IN CERTAIN OCCUPATIONS.— Especial exemptions are sometimes given to persons engaged in certain occupations, as farming, mechanical trades, mercantile pursuits and the like. An exemption to farmer is not defeated by temporarily engaging in a different pursuit.¹⁵³ And a "laborer" is entitled to the exemption allowed by law if he is engaged in a toilsome occupation requiring the use of the exempt articles.¹⁵⁴ A retail druggist is not a "mechanic, miner, or other person" within the meaning of a statute exempting necessary tools and implements.¹⁵⁵ The conducting of a business under a company name does not affect the right to exemptions.¹⁵⁶

e. Effect of fraud on right to exemptions.— (1) IN GENERAL.— If a debtor is guilty of fraud against his general creditors, he may, under the law in many states, be denied his exemptions. This rule does not depend upon the bankruptcy act, but exists because of some express statutory provision or the decisions of the courts of the State under the laws of which the bankrupt makes his claim.¹⁵⁷ But a court of bankruptcy proceeds upon equitable principles, and

Failure to keep books.— In the case of In re Leverton (D. C., Pa.), 19 Am. B. R. 428, 155 Fed. 925, it was held that where a merchant did not keep any books and failed to account for $3,000 during a period of three months, and the evidence showed that he had either made away with his goods or their proceeds, he will be refused his exemption because of a fraudulent concealment of assets.

Where the bankrupt has removed a greater part of his property from the jurisdiction of the court, a claim for an exemption from the balance will be disallowed.

will no more sustain a positive fraud than will a court of equity,¹⁵⁸ so that if it appears that the bankrupt has by some fraudulent device, with the purpose of creating an exemption, diverted funds that would rightfully have been distributed among his creditors, his claim of exemption will not be allowed.¹⁵⁹ A bankrupt who is guilty of false swearing upon an examination as to his assets may be denied his exemption.¹⁶⁰ Where the bankrupt acquires the property by fraud, he can have no exemption thereon.¹⁶¹

(2) FRAUDULENT CONCEALMENT OF ASSETS.—The effect of fraudulent concealment of assets by a bankrupt on his right to exemptions will depend largely upon the statutes of the State.^{161a} In Georgia it is provided by statute that a debtor who is guilty of wilful fraud in the concealment of part of his property from his creditors loses his exemption.¹⁶² In Pennsylvania a bankrupt, who

Under the statute and decisions of Alabama, the fraud of a bankrupt in making false financial statements to mercantile agencies does bar his claim to exemptions. Matter of Ziff (D. C., Ala.), 35 Am. B. R. 83, 225 Fed. 323.

Not forfeited for violation of bankruptcy act.—A bankrupt does not forfeit his right to claim the exemptions secured to him by the State law, by doing some act prohibited, or omitting to discharge some duty enjoined by the Bankruptcy Act, as for instance, by conveying property in fraud of his creditors, or failing to schedule portions of his property, especially in a State where it is settled that a fraudulent disposition of property by a debtor does not work a forfeiture of exemptions. Business under assumed name.—In the case of In re McUita (D. C., Pa.), 26 Am. B. R. 490, 189 Fed. 250, it was contended by the creditor of a bankrupt that he was transacting business under an assumed name and that he could not obtain title to goods which he claimed as exempt where he had obtained such goods by fraud, in that he did not inform his creditors of his right name; it was held that at common law a man may lawfully change his name and there was no statute in Pennsylvania prohibiting such change, the bankrupt and those with whom he dealt were bound by the name assumed by him and as the assumption of such name was not, of itself, a fraud upon creditors dealing with him, the bankrupt was entitled to his exemption.

Under the Georgia statute it has been held that a bankrupt, who sought to get his property out of the reach of his creditors just before and at the time of his bankruptcy and apparently succeeded in doing so, was not entitled to such constitutional exemption under the decisions of the State court construing § 2830 of Ga. Civil Code, 1895 (Hopkins Code, 1910, § 3380), to require a bankrupt who seeks such exemption to deal with perfect fairness with his creditors and to disclose and deliver up everything he has except this exemption and that a failure to do this would defeat his application. In re Cochran (D. C., Ga.), 26 Am. B. R. 459, 185 Fed. 913; Matter of Hardy (D. C., Ga.), 36 Am. B. R. 358, 229 Fed. 825.

Under the Georgia statute, the transfer of real estate by the bankrupts to their wives more than four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy does not deprive them of their exemptions, nor does the making of false statements in writing to their creditors to obtain credit constitute a valid objection. In re Cotton & Preston (D. C., Ga.), 25 Am. B. R. 532, 183 Fed. 190; Matter of Powell (D. C., Ga.), 36 Am. B. R. 367, 230 Fed. 316.

In the case of In re Dobbs (D. C., Ga.), 22 Am. B. R. 801, 173 Fed. 682, the bankrupt was denied his exemptions, where it appeared that he had made a statement to a commercial agency, in which his assets and indebtedness were specified as a certain amount and about a year thereafter the schedules filed by him showed a great depre-

deliberately and wilfully conceals or denies the ownership of property, in order to prevent it from being subjected to the payment of his debts, forfeits his right to exemptions.¹⁶³ The fraudulent concealment must be proved to a reasonable certainty, and the bankrupt is entitled to the benefit of the doubt; fraud is not presumed or imputed to the bankrupt.¹⁶⁴ Where the exact amount of personal property concealed by a bankrupt cannot be ascertained, he may not be allowed his exemptions until all his personal property is accounted for, or until the further order of the court.¹⁶⁵ The failure of a bankrupt to schedule property, which was in possession of his wife, is not a concealment for which his claim for exemptions will be denied.¹⁶⁶ But under a State law, providing that a person forfeits his right to exemption by fraudulent concealment of his property, a failure of the bankrupt to schedule life insurance policies, the possession of which he at first denied upon his examination, but was subsequently compelled to admit, justifies the denial of his exemptions.¹⁶⁷

(3) FRAUDULENT TRANSFER.—If there had been a fraudulent transfer of property by a bankrupt, which amounts to a concealment or withholding of property from his creditors, under a State statute making such an act sufficient to deprive the bankrupt of his exemptions, such a transfer will preclude the allowance to him of his exemptions. The mere fact that a fraudulent transfer has been made is not sufficient to justify the denial of the bankrupt's exemptions; it must ordinarily be made to appear that the fraud was directly connected with the claim of exemptions.¹⁶⁸ The rule, independent of statute, elation in the value of his assets, and the bankrupt having kept no books of account, failed to satisfactorily explain what he had done with his property, or what had caused so great a change in his financial condition.

Under the law of Alabama a referee in bankruptcy, upon the contest of bankrupt's claim to exemptions, has the right to charge the exemptions with any property shown to have been in bankrupt's possession when bankruptcy intervened and not disclosed by his inventory or surrendered to his trustee; but property fraudulently transferred or parted with by bankrupt in any way, prior to bankruptcy, in order to prevent its application to the payment of his debts, cannot be treated as part of his exempt property; nor can his exemptions be deemed as a punishment for any conduct on bankrupt's part, however reprehensible it might be as to his creditors. In re Denson (D. C., Ala.), 28 Am. B. R. 162, 195 Fed. 857.

Failure to surrender.—A referee may charge a bankrupt's exemption with the value of goods in his possession, upon the eve of bankruptcy, which he failed to surrender to his trustee, in the absence of a reasonable explanation of the failure. Matter of Aronson (D. Failure to account.—A bankrupt who fails to satisfactorily account for assets in excess of $50,000 which disappeared during the year prior to the bankruptcy, may be denied his right of exemption upon the ground that there was a concealment of property in fraud of creditors. In re Rice (D. C., Pa.), 21 Am. B. R. 202, 164 Fed. 589.

R. 283, 115 Fed. 924, where it appeared that the bankrupt a long time prior to bankruptcy had made a transfer of his homestead to his wife in an attempt to evade liability as surety on a bond, and the wife subsequently reconveyed the land to the bankrupt. It was held that the bankrupt was entitled to a homestead exemption since the bankruptcy court could not inquire into the initial fraud attending the conveyance to the wife.

Ordinary creditors have no interest in exempt property. Its transfer, even with a purpose to hinder, delay or defraud them, is not an act of which they can complain. Matter of Ziff (D. C., Ala.), 35 Am. B. R. 83, 225 Fed. 323, see Am. Bankr. Dig. § 972.

Reconveyance to bankrupt after fraudulent transfer.—A bankrupt within four months of bankruptcy being advised that his homestead tract was exempt and could be conveyed at his pleasure, conveyed the same to a third party with the purpose that such third party should convey to the bankrupt's is, however, that exemptions, being a matter of right, should not be denied, even if asserted in property fraudulently transferred or concealed and later recovered by the trustee.¹⁶⁹ If a bankrupt has transferred property which is subject to an exemption, he, by his act, has placed his exemption beyond his own reach.¹⁷⁰ A transfer or disposition of property for a fair consideration, and with an honest motive, will not prejudice the bankrupt's right to exemption.¹⁷¹ A transfer in good faith by a bankrupt of all his property to an assignee for the benefit of creditors does not deprive him of his right to exemptions in subsequent bankruptcy proceedings.¹⁷² If a bankrupt transfers property in which he is entitled to an exemption prior to his bankruptcy, it would not operate as a fraud against the creditors since they would not be entitled in any event, to subject the property to the payment of his debts.¹⁷³ A different question arises where a bankrupt has made a fraudulent transfer of his property and the trustee recovers the property transferred. The courts have not agreed upon this question. The conflict is more apparent, however, than real. In many of the cases where the fraud in the conveyance has been held to deprive the bankrupt of his exemption, State statutes have been applied, which either directly or impliedly permit the denial of an exemption because of fraud. In the absence of statutory provision the correct rule seems to be that where a fraudulent transfer has been set aside, the property may be subjected to the bankrupt's exemptions.¹⁷⁴ For the same reason it has been usually held wife; after filing his petition in bankruptcy he was advised that under the Tennessee law, his creditors had a right to a remainder in his homestead, and he procured the third party to reconvey such homestead tract to him; he thereupon applied and obtained leave to amend his schedules by adding this property as an asset in which he claimed a homestead; it was held that in the absence of actual fraud, that the homestead should be set aside to him as exempt. In re Tollett (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 5 Am. B. R. 404, 106 Fed. 866.

The Virginia constitution, section 191, provides in effect that exemptions shall not be claimed in property, the conveyance of which "has been set aside on the ground of fraud or want of consideration." It was held that where, pending a suit by creditors to set aside a deed of land, the debtor obtains a reconveyance thereof and executes a proper deed of homestead under the State law, and is adjudicated a bankrupt, prior to a decree of the State court setting aside the conveyance, the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to determine the bankrupt's claim to a homestead exemption in the property, and the claim should be allowed. In re Allen & Co. (D. 174. Exemption in property recovered.—In the case of In re Thompson (D. C., Wash.), 15 Am. B. R. 287, 115 Fed. 924, the court said: "The attempted transfer being void as to creditors, the property still remains that of the bankrupt for the purpose of paying his debts; otherwise we would have the anomaly of the debts of the bankrupt being paid out of the property of a third person. The property being subject to the debts of the bankrupt, could not be so upon any other theory than that of ownership by him. While it is true some courts have held that where a bankrupt commits fraud in the conveyance of his property which is recovered at the suit of creditors, he is precluded from that where an assignment for the benefit of creditors has been nullified by the subsequent bankruptcy of the assignor, the bankrupt may claim his exemptions in the property assigned.¹⁷⁵

(4) PREFERENTIAL TRANSFER.—Where property is preferentially transferred to a creditor and subsequently recovered by the trustee, it has been held that after the trustee has been put to the expense and inconvenience of recovering the property conveyed, the bankrupt should not be permitted to claim his exemption.¹⁷⁶ A distinction has been made between the right of a bankrupt to claim his exemption out of fraudulently conveyed property recovered by a trustee and the claim of an exemption out of property which had been voluntarily transferred by the bankrupt to a creditor.¹⁷⁷ There is not much reason for this distinction. The effect of the surrender or recovery of preferences received by creditors is to restore the property of the bankrupt to his estate as if such preference had not been given. When a preferential transfer is set aside it has the same effect as the setting aside of a fraudulent transfer. The property then becomes restored to the bankrupt's estate and is subject to his exemptions. This doctrine seems to be sustained at the present time by the weight of authority.¹⁷⁸ It has been held that where the bankrupt has scheduled property out of which he claims exemptions, and the trustee later recovers other property which had been preferentially transferred, the making claim to exemptions, yet the weight of authority is the other way. Those authorities which hold that an act of fraud is sufficient to deprive one of exemptions, in my opinion, confound fraudulent transfers generally, with statutory rights. There can be no such thing as fraud, in claiming that which the law allows."

Upon the restoration of the property fraudulently transferred to the bankrupt's estate, it becomes subject to his exemption. Bashinski v. Talbott (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 9 Am. B. R. 513, 119 Fed. 337; In re Falconer (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 6 Am. B. R. 557, 110 Fed. 111; In re Schuller (D. C., Wis.), 6 Am. B. R. 278, 108 Fed. 591. In the case of In re Tollett (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 5 Am. B. R. 404, 106 Fed. 866, it was held that the conveyance of property without fraud in fact, even though there was constructive legal fraud, does not bar the right of the bankrupt to claim a homestead in the property, when it is recovered by the trustee.

Under the bankruptcy act of 1867, a similar doctrine prevailed. It was uniformly held in controversies arising under that act that if the assignee recovered property which had been conveyed in fraud of the provisions of the act, the bankrupt could successfully assert any homestead right which he originally possessed in the property recovered by the assignee, and that the right was not forfeited by the debtor's fraudulent conduct. *Cox v. Effect of surrender of preferences.—In re Soper (D. C., Nebr.), 22 Am. B. R. 868, 173 Fed. 924, in which case the court said: "The effect of the surrender of preferences received by the creditors was to restore the property of the bankrupt to his estate, as if no mortgage had ever been made upon the property. The bankrupt has not lost his right to claim his exemptions, unless it is because of the mortgage given by him. The trustee did not obtain the property under this mortgage, but in hostility to it. It came into his hands unburdened by the mortgage and as if the mortgage had never been given. Therefore neither the trustee nor the bankrupt are estopped by the terms of the mortgage. From the time the trustee took the property until such time as the bankrupt former will not be permitted to abandon his previous claim and assert it against such property.¹⁷⁹

(5) ACQUISITION OF PROPERTY TO SECURE EXEMPTIONS.—There is a conflict of authority as to whether the purchase of exempt property on the eve of bankruptcy is fraudulent. It has been held that if a bankrupt purchases exempt property on the eve of bankruptcy, so as to secure the exemption, he commits a fraud upon his creditors which will give to the trustee a right to take the property from him, free from any claim of exemption.¹⁸⁰ But there are cases to the contrary.¹⁸¹ Where, however, the alleged fraudulent transaction involves the sale of non-exempt property, and the use of the proceeds in reducing an incumbrance against an exempt homestead, it will not avail.¹⁸² And where, pending suit in a State court to set aside a deed of land, the debtor obtains a reconveyance of the land and executes a proper deed of homestead under the State law, and is adjudicated a bankrupt prior to a decree setting aside the conveyance, the bankruptcy court may determine the claim of homestead exemption in the land.¹⁸³ A general assignment is not sufficiently fraudulent to come within the rules previously stated.¹⁸⁴

f. Exemptions out of incumbered property.—All valid liens are preserved by the statute.¹⁸⁵ Under principles already discussed, a court of bankruptcy has should assert his claim to exemptions, the trustee had the title to all of the property and the mortgage was no lien upon any portion of it. Upon the assertion of the right of the bankrupt to his exemptions the mortgage was not revived upon the articles selected as exempt. The title of the bankrupt is a new title in effect antedating the mortgage, because the mortgage was given within four months of the bankruptcy. Upon the restoration of his property to the bankrupt's estate, it was subject to the exemption of the bankrupt."

A bankrupt may claim an exemption in property, which he has made the subject of a preferential transfer. The giving of waiver notes by a bankrupt in excess of the value of his exempt property thereby preferring the note holders cannot defeat the bankrupt's right to exemptions. Matter of Ziff (D. C., Ala.), 35 Am. B. R. 83, 225 Fed. 323.

Homestead in Virginia; "Shifting stock of merchandise"—A merchant who, two days before his adjudication in bankruptcy, in contemplation thereof, separates from his stock numerous articles of merchandise and places them, together with his store fixtures and household goods in boxes, for the purpose of enabling him to claim that they had ceased to be a part of a shifting stock of merchandise and could be claimed as exempt under the constitution and statutes of Virginia, which provide for a homestead exemption, but do not allow it to be claimed in a "shifting stock of merchandise," cannot by such acts defeat the rights of creditors and secure a homestead exemption in such property. *Laderburg v. Effect of setting aside mortgaged property.—While bankruptcy courts have jurisdiction to determine all claims of bankrupts to exemptions, it is well settled that the setting aside of a homestead to a bankrupt does not relieve the property from the operation of a mortgage or vendor's lien thereon obtained before bankruptcy. Pace v. Berry (Ky. Ct. of App.), 40 Am. B. R. 53, 195 S. W. 131. Where, in an action to foreclose a real estate mortgage in a State court, the defendant, who has been discharged as a bankrupt, claims the property as a homestead, and it no jurisdiction to determine either the existence or priority of liens on exempt property, unless such property is worth more than the exemption allowed by the State statute.¹⁸⁶ In many States the bankrupt has an absolute right to selection in specie; and, it seems, he can insist on it even though he thereby destroys the surplus value belonging to the trustee.¹⁸⁷ Where the lien is dissolved by the bankruptcy as that of an execution following a judgment recovered within four months, the bankrupt is entitled to his exemption in the property which was affected by such lien,¹⁸⁸ or, if it has been sold, from the proceeds of the sale. There seems some reason for the rule laid down in some courts that liens procured through legal proceedings during the four months' period are not annulled so far as they affect property claimed by the bankrupt as exempt,¹⁸⁹ but in that jurisdiction where property is sold at a receiver's sale the right to exemptions is transferred from the property to the proceeds and the bankrupt may claim his exemption in money,¹⁹⁰ since, by § 67-f, the annulment of such liens is apparently for the purpose of passing over the property affected to the trustee for the benefit of the estate, freed from all such incumbrances. On the other hand the provision referred to is absolute in its effect; all liens, etc., acquired through legal proceedings during the four months' period are annulled absolutely and there seems no good reason why the provision should not inure to the benefit of the bankrupt as well as his creditors.¹⁹¹ As between incumbered and unincumbered property exempt in specie, the bankrupt will be given the unincumbered. But where the debtor, within four months of the bankruptcy, gave a mortgage on his stock in trade, otherwise exempt, but without specifying the exemption, the mortgage is a preference and will not be declared good to the extent of the exemption allowance, because a claim to exemption is personal to the bankrupt and must be appears that, in the bankruptcy proceedings, the debt of the plaintiff secured by said mortgage was duly scheduled, that plaintiff had notice and appeared, and that the property described in his mortgage was, upon a hearing of plaintiff's exceptions thereto, set apart and adjudged to be the homestead of defendant, such judgment of the bankruptcy court is conclusive as to the parties therein. *McCurry v. Annulment of liens.—In the case of In re Forbes (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 26 Am. B. R. 355, 186 Fed. 79, the court said: "But the provisions of section 67 (f) are not limited to the annulment of liens on property that passes to the trustee. They are general and sweeping and apply to liens acquired through legal proceedings against the bankrupt during the four months' period prior to his filing his petition in bankruptcy." Citing Collier on Bankruptcy, 8th ed., p. 161. The court held that upon the filing of the petition in bankruptcy an attachment lien which had been acquired during the four months' period made by him.¹⁹² It has even been held, on a strict construction of § 64-a, that taxes on an exempt homestead must be paid out of the general fund.¹⁹³

g. Kinds of property exempt.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The cases referable to this subdivision are very numerous. Where a bankrupt bought goods, agreeing to give security for the same, and filed his petition before doing so, he is not entitled to exemptions in property so obtained.¹⁹⁴ In Pennsylvania the exemption to a debtor, under the act of 1849, of "property to the value of $300," may not be allowed out of the proceeds of property to be subsequently sold.¹⁹⁵ As has already been said the State law governs as to exemptions, and this is especially so as to the kind and amount of property which is exempt.¹⁹⁶

(2) WATCHES, WEARING APPAREL, IMPLEMENTS OF TRADE, AND THE LIKE.—A watch is or is not exempt according to the circumstances of the bankrupt. Thus it has been held to be exempt where it was necessary for the bankrupt to know the time.¹⁹⁷ It has been held to be both wearing apparel,¹⁹⁸ and an against property claimed by the bankrupt as a homestead was dissolved, and that the bankrupt was entitled to his exemption.

Failure to claim in prior deed of trust.—The fact that a bankrupt had made a deed of trust for the benefit of creditors, in which he did not claim exemptions, is not a valid objection to his claim in the bankruptcy court. Matter of Gorman (D. C., Md.), 35 Am. B. R. 638, 226 Fed. 361.

Rights of mortgagee.—Where a mortgagee of property of a bankrupt exempt per se, prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, asserted his rights as mortgagee and reduced the property to possession, title passed to him, and no subsequent act or declaration of the bankrupt, or refusal or failure on his part to assert the exemption can affect the mortgagee's title, and the trustee in bankruptcy cannot recover the proceeds of the exempt property, although the mortgage may be avoided as preferential as to other property. Matter of French (D. Right under New York Code of Civil Procedure, § 1391.—The exemption created by section 1391 of the New York Code of Civil Procedure is a qualified one, inasmuch as it is limited and indefinite, and where a debtor has property of that character of greater value than $250, the exemption of any particular property and what property is dependent upon his election as to the particular property that may be retained by him. Matter of French (D. C., N. Y.), 37 Am. B. R. 289, 231 Fed. 255.

Earnings; proceeds of milk.—The proceeds of milk delivered to a condensary by an unmarried farmer working a rented farm are not "earnings" and exempt under section 2463 of the Code of Civil Procedure which provides that proceedings supplementary to execution cannot reach "the earnings of the judgment debtor for his personal services, rendered within the sixty days, next before the institution of the special proceeding," etc. Matter of French (D. C., N. Y.), 37 Am. B. R. 289, 231 Fed. 255.

But in Delaware a gold watch, a watch chain, cuff links, two watch fobs, a gold ring, a gold ring with diamond setting, a gold ring with sapphire setting, a pearl scarf pin, a ruby scarf pin, and a set of shirt studs of the aggregate value of $444.50, have been held to be wearing apparel. In re Evans & Co. (D. C., Del.), 19 Am. B. R. 752, 158 Fed. 153.

Under the Massachusetts statute, a watch is not part of the necessary wearing apparel implement of trade.¹⁹⁹ Even a diamond stud has been declared exempt, though this case would seem treacherous authority.²⁰⁰ The question of whether or not jewelry will be regarded as wearing apparel will depend upon whether or not it was acquired and used as ornamental apparel or was acquired and kept as an investment of values, as a matter of business.²⁰¹ The tools and implements of a bankrupt's trade are exempt in most of the States;²⁰² so are his household furniture and wearing apparel to limited amounts.²⁰³ A seat in a stock exchange is not exempt unless made so by statute.²⁰⁴ In Vermont, an unbroken horse is so far a domestic animal as to be exempt;²⁰⁵ but a race horse is not.²⁰⁶ In Pennsylvania the proceeds of the sale of a liquor license have been held to be exempt.²⁰⁷ Under an exemption statute which exempts to every family one carriage or buggy, it has been held that an automobile is exempt, especially where of the debtor, and is not exempt. In re Turnbull (D. C., Mass.), 5 Am. B. R. 549, 106 Fed. 667, affg. 5 Am. B. R. 231.

In Maine the canoe of a registered guide was held exempt, but not his rifle. Matter of Mullen (D. C., Me.), 15 Am. B. R. 275, 140 Fed. 206.

In Nebraska the conveyances and equipment of a poultry dealer have been held to be exempt. Matter of Ellsworth Conley (D. C., Nebr.), 19 Am. B. R. 200, 162 Fed. 806.

In California under subdivision 6 of section 690 of the Code of California, exempting "one dray or truck . . . by the use of which a . . . drayman . . . truckman . . . habitually earns his living," an auto truck should not be exempted where it does not appear that the petitioner habitually used the same in earning his living. Matter of Schumm (D. C., Cal.), 36 Am. B. R. 427, 232 Fed. 414.

"Working tools."—Milk cans, plows, harrows, cultivators, buzz saws, ice racks, hay racks, harness for team and team blankets are necessary "working tools" for a farmer, within the meaning of section 1391 of the New York Code of Civil Procedure. Matter of French (D. 203. Goods and furniture exempt under Washington statute.—Under section 563, paragraph 3, of Rem. & Bal. Statutes of Washington, exempting "To each householder, one bed and bedding, and one additional bed and bedding for each additional member of the family, and other household goods, utensils and furniture not exceeding $500.00, coin, in value," the particular articles of property exempt, being named, excludes additional property of the same class. Hence, the householder in selecting other goods, etc., to the value of $500.00 may not include beds and bedding. Matter of Robinson (D. C., Wash.), 33 Am. B. R. 27, 215 Fed. 662.

(3) HOMESTEADS.—Here again resort must be had to the decisions of the State court.²¹⁰ Exemptions or freedom from liability granted in favor of homesteads given by the federal government are not exemptions within the meaning of the bankruptcy Act.^{210a} A homestead set off under the State law may be adopted by a court of bankruptcy,²¹¹ but a new allotment will sometimes be ordered.²¹² A bankrupt is not precluded from claiming a homestead as exempt from the operation of the bankruptcy law merely because, prior to the adjudication, he had failed to designate a homestead under the laws of the State, provided that, after claiming it, he proceed under the State law to perfect his right within a reasonable time.²¹³ It is a common rule that actual designation and occupancy are essential to the right;²¹⁴ but it seems a homestead may be abandoned and one more valuable be occupied even within the four months' period.²¹⁵

Rights of mortgagee.—The right existing under the provision of section 2976 of the Iowa Code, that a homestead even where validity mortgaged may be sold "Only for a deficiency remaining after exhausting all other property" covered by the same mortgage, is not strictly personal to the mortgagors, but may be asserted by one to whom they have transferred an interest in the homestead, such as a mortgagee, and a waiver of homestead rights by the mortgagor after the subsequent mortgage, cannot prejudice the mortgagee in the exercise of this right, which may be invoked in a suit to marshal the assets as to several mortgage liens. *Moody & Son v. But a bankrupt is not entitled to a second homestead.²¹⁶ Under the laws of some States, the owner of a homestead may change it, and acquire a new one equal to it in value, if he does so in good faith.²¹⁷ Homestead exemptions cannot be allowed in vacant property,²¹⁸ or in a house built with funds derived from goods not paid for.²¹⁹ Where a person is adjudicated a bankrupt in one State the court may not set apart to him a homestead in lands of another State, not occupied by him.²²⁰ To constitute a valid claim of homestead, there must be an occupancy in fact, or something equivalent to it; there must be some positive indication of an intent to actually occupy the premises; an undefined floating intention to occupy at some future time is insufficient.²²¹ Although occupancy is essential under most statutes to create a homestead right, such occupancy may be constructive as well as actual, and a homestead being once established, absence therefrom is not sufficient to indicate abandonment, unless it is shown to be the intent of the parties.²²² A homestead is not abandoned by the removal of a husband with his family to another State, when there is an intention to return and make it their home.²²³ Where the owner of a homestead, while indebted, deeds it to a third person who agrees to reconvey to the wife of the owner upon payment by her of certain debts and permits her to remain in possession, the deed and the contract to reconvey constitute but one transaction, and under the laws of Iowa the homestead right was never extinguished and there was no time when creditors could intervene and claim a right prior to the homestead.²²⁴ A bankrupt may have his homestead in a store, but will not be permitted to claim a homestead where he merely stores his goods.²²⁵ And a person may have a homestead in a hotel building where the statute merely limits the value of the homestead and not the area.²²⁶ A woman, doing business as a feme sole, though living with her husband, has been allowed a homestead,²²⁷ and it has been held that a homestead set apart as alimony for the benefit of a wife and child cannot be distributed among her creditors in bankruptcy.²²⁸ Where a State law exempts the homestead of every family from judicial sale and prevents a conveyance thereof unless both husband and wife join therein, the adjudication of the wife as a bankrupt does not defeat the right of the husband to have the homestead set apart to him, although the bankrupt made no claim of exemption in her schedules.²²⁹ Under some statutes a wife may, after bankruptcy of her husband, claim a homestead exemption.²³⁰ A tenant by the curtesy has sufficient possession to sustain a homestead,²³¹ but not a mere remainderman.²³² A homestead claim may attach to the undivided interest of a tenant in common.²³³ A leasehold interest in land, together with a storebuilding and dwelling house combined, constructed upon the land and occupied by the bankrupt and his family, may be claimed as a homestead.²³⁴ A bankrupt's homestead is exempt though it was paid for with the proceeds of non-exempt property.²³⁵ Crops on a homestead are or are not exempt according to circumstances.²³⁶ Where a bankrupt's homestead is sold under foreclosure, and a surplus remains after paying the mortgage debt, the bankrupt is entitled to an exemption therein up to the statutory limit.²³⁷ Money realized from insurance arising from exempt property is exempt.²³⁸ It would seem that the jurisdiction of a court of bankruptcy over homestead property extends even to the sale of it for certain purposes.²³⁹ Where the real estate in which a homestead exemption is claimed is indivisible steps should be taken to have it sold.²⁴⁰ But since the title to real estate of a bankrupt, exempt under the State law as a homestead, does not vest in the trustee, a bankruptcy court has no jurisdiction to sell such property upon the petition of a creditor who may have a claim or lien thereon.²⁴¹ Where the statute authorizes a sale and an application of excess proceeds to the payment of debts, the bankrupt may retain possession until such sale.²⁴² A bankrupt by accepting personal property set off to him as exempt does not waive his right to appeal from the order of the referee on a claim for a homestead exemption.²⁴³ For cases on what constitutes in different States an abandonment of a homestead, see the foot-note.²⁴⁴

(4) INSURANCE POLICIES.—Insurance policies are not always exempt under the laws of the States. Where they are, the question at once arises: How far is § 6 of the law limited by § 70-a (5)? The cases seem to turn on whether the policy is of such a nature as to have a present cash surrender value. If it has no such value, or if the wife must consent to its transfer, it seems that it is not an asset that passes to the trustee, and may be exempt.²⁴⁵ The circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit has even held that the only test is whether the policy is exempt by the State law; in other words, that the provisions of § 70-a (5) are not a limitation of § 6.²⁴⁶ The same court in the ninth circuit has held the opposite, provided the policy is payable to the bankrupt;²⁴⁷ the rule in the seventh circuit is much the same.²⁴⁸ In Pennsylvania, a policy of insurance upon a bankrupt's life, taken out for the benefit of, or bona fide assigned to, his wife or children, vests in them free of all claims of the creditors of the bankrupt, and is exempt.²⁴⁹ Where a State statute exempts a policy payable to the wife of the insured, the policy is exempt from the claims of the creditors of the husband in bankruptcy proceedings, although he has reserved the right to change the beneficiary,²⁵⁰ unless it appears that the policy provides for the payment to the insured of a fixed, definite sum at the end of a stated period.²⁵¹ And this protection extends to a policy assigned by the husband to the wife on the eve of the husband's bankruptcy with full knowledge by both of his insolvent condition.²⁵² If the bankrupt has a valuable interest in the policy independent of that of the beneficiary, as where there is a cash surrender value accruing to him, the interest such as he has passes to the trustee, freed from the exemption; this would be the rule in those States like New York where the exemption is only applied in case the policy is payable absolutely to the wife.²⁵³ The United States Supreme Court has held, under a statute exempting from liability for debts the proceeds of a life insurance policy, that the proceeds of a semi-tontine or paid up policy

are exempt, although it has a cash surrender value.²⁵⁴ This determination of the Supreme Court seems definitely to establish the rule that if a life insurance policy, or any rights under it, are exempt under a State law, such part thereof as is subject to the exemption remains to the bankrupt notwithstanding the provisions of § 70-a.^{254a}

(5) PENSION MONEY.—The Federal law protects pension money from seizure by levy and sale;²⁵⁵ and the States sometimes protect it after it has been transformed into other property.²⁵⁶ It is exempt everywhere while in transit from the government to the pensioner, or in the form in which it was paid to him;²⁵⁷ and probably if it could be traced into some other kind of property and identified, such property would be exempt.²⁵⁸ The opposite rule pertains, however, where the pensioner has embarked it in business, or where it has been invested in land from which at the time of his bankruptcy he has, through a mortgage thereon, already withdrawn more than the land cost.²⁵⁹

(6) UNPAID PURCHASE MONEY.—It is sometimes provided by State law that an exemption from execution shall not extend to a process issued upon a demand for the purchase price of the estate claimed as exempt.²⁶⁰ Any creditor of a bankrupt may avail himself of this exception.²⁶¹ This decision rests on a strict construction of the law. The rule seems well settled in those States that grant exemptions in specie, provided the property with taxes paid, is not worth the amount allowed.

IV. PRACTICE.

a. Exemptions set off where no trustee is appointed.—A difficulty arises when once provides that if the insured survive for more than twenty years from the date of the policy he shall receive an annuity of $60 during the remainder of his life, and, further, that upon the death of the insured at any time during the continuance of the policy $1,000 shall be paid to the wife, and the law of the State in which the insured resides exempts from any claim of the husband's creditors policies of insurance for the benefit of the wife, although paid for by the husband, the wife has a vested interest in such policy and upon the insured becoming bankrupt his trustee is entitled only to the value of the annuity provided for and not to the entire present value of the policy as against the wife. In re Schaeffer (D. C., Ohio), 26 Am. B. R. 340, 188 Fed. 187.

A straight life insurance policy, issued to a bankrupt for the benefit of his wife payable only at his death, but reserving to the insured the right to change the beneficiary without his wife's consent, and providing that upon default in the payment of any premium, after two full annual premiums have been paid, the policy may be surrendered "with the written assent of the person to whom it is made payable," is exempt from the demands of creditors under the General Code of Ohio and is, therefore, protected by this section. Matter of Fetterman (D. C., Ohio), 39 Am. B. R. 834, 243 Fed. 975.

Massachusetts statute.—An endowment policy which has been assigned and in which the beneficiary has been changed with the consent of the company, and upon which a cash surrender value has been computed by it, held not to be exempt under the statute of Massachusetts. Matter of Simmons and Griffin (D. In the case of In re Bailes (D. C., So. Cal.), 23 Am. B. R. 789, 176 Fed. 460, it was held that a right of exemption of personal property cannot be defeated by a claim for a loan of money with which the property claimed as exempt was purchased.

The Constitution of Arkansas, Article IX, sections 1 and 2, providing for the allowance of exemptions, contains the proviso, "that no property shall be exempt from execution for debts contracted for the purchase money thereof, while in the hands of the vendee." Held, that bankrupt was not entitled to claim exemptions from a stock of merchandise in his possession at the time of the filing of the petition, the purchase price of which had not been paid but had been allowed as a claim against the estate. *Mullinix v. the bankrupt claims exemptions and no creditors appear at the first meeting. By General Order XV, a trustee may be and usually is dispensed with. This leaves the court without the officer whose duty it is to report on and set off the exemptions. It is thought that in such cases the judge or referee may try the validity of the claim summarily. In some of the districts this practice is sanctioned by rule.²⁶² Where such a practice is followed, the claiming bankrupt should at least be required to file an affidavit giving facts in addition to those stated in his Schedule B (5), and such affidavit should show him clearly entitled under the State law to the property claimed.

b. Schedules to claim exemptions.—The bankrupt must in his schedules show that he is entitled to the exemptions which he claims. When he has done this, as directed by the bankruptcy act, the exemption must be set apart.²⁶³ And the fact that his schedules are not filed for a long time after adjudication does not deprive him of his right.²⁶⁴ The failure of the bankrupt to precisely observe the requirements of "Schedule B (5)," of the forms in bankruptcy in making the claim is not fatal; as, for instance, a failure to specifically enumerate the articles claimed as exempt.²⁶⁵

c. Amendment of schedules as to claim of exemptions.—General Order XI permits an amendment to schedules on the application of the bankrupt. This is sufficient to authorize an amendment so as to permit the bankrupt to claim his exemptions where he has through mistake failed to claim such exemptions. If he inadvertently omits from his schedules a valid claim of exemption an amendment should be permitted upon satisfactory proof of the mistake.²⁶⁶ But an amendment will not be permitted where it does not appear that an error or mistake was made,²⁶⁷ or where its purpose is to benefit creditors who hold

"1. Where there is no trustee appointed, the exemptions claimed by the bankrupt may be set off to him at the time the order to that effect is signed, and, in that event, the following clause shall be inserted in Form 27:

"And it appearing that the said bankrupt is entitled to the exemptions claimed in the schedules accompanying the petition herein, it is further ordered that the property claimed in said schedules, being exempt pursuant to § 1390 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the State of New York, be, and the same is hereby set off to the said..... the bankrupt."

"Prior to asking for such order the bankrupt shall satisfy the referee, by affidavit or otherwise, as to the value of such exemptions, and that he is entitled to the same."

waivers of exemptions or to avoid a charge of concealment of property,²⁶⁸ or where it is apparent that the exemption, if included in the schedules, will be of no value to the bankrupt or his family.²⁶⁹ If the claim was omitted through inadvertence, an amendment asserting it will usually be allowed, even to reach property surrendered by one creditor to the trustee.²⁷⁰ The application for such amendment should be seasonably made.²⁷¹ An amendment should be permitted upon a proper showing if the application was made within a reasonable time while the property was still in the hands of the trustee, unaffected by adverse rights,²⁷² and the amendment when allowed must relate to conditions existing at the time the imperfect claim was formulated.²⁷³ The Federal courts are not bound to follow the State courts in the matter of the time of filing the declaration of the claim of exemptions, and may allow amendment of the claim after the original schedule has been filed.²⁷⁴

d. Claim of specific property.—The claim must be clearly stated, especially if of property in specie.²⁷⁵ Where the State law specifies the property which may be set apart as an exemption, the bankrupt may not claim and the trustee may not set apart a gross sum in lieu of such exemption; the State law must be complied with and the specific property must be claimed and set apart.²⁷⁶ In Pennsylvania, after a sale of property not exempt, a bankrupt,

^{276.} State law determines amount and character.—The statutes of the State determine the amount and character of the exemptions and to whom they are allowed, both as to general and special exemptions; when a bankrupt has property which is especially exempt when selected by him, and other property subject to be selected in lieu of homestead, at the time of the filing of his petition, it is his duty to set out specifically, the articles selected, together with his estimate of the value thereof, separately. Matter of Mc-

even though entitled to an exemption in cash in the first instance, cannot assert his claim against the cash proceeds of such sale.²⁷⁷ Under the laws of that State it is the goods, and not the proceeds of their sale, that he is entitled to.²⁷⁸ If the property subject to exemption has been sold by authority of the court before the bankrupt's claim of the exemption had been made, or the time allowed for making it has expired, the right to its allowance is not extinguished, and the bankrupt may have his exemption out of the proceeds of the sale.²⁷⁹

R. 728, holding that under the Ohio statute the particular property selected as exempt must be described in the schedules; a claim of exemptions in general terms is insufficient, as simply "$500.00 in lieu of a homestead," unless at the time of the bankruptcy there was cash in the estate.

In re Wunder (D. C., Pa.), 13 Am. B. R. 701, 133 Fed. 821, in which the court said: "In order that he may be allowed his claim he must comply with the requirements of the state law as well in regard to the manner of making the claim as to the articles claimed, and as to whether he has done this or not, the law, as construed by the highest court of the State, will be conclusive. If the bankrupt does not comply with these requirements, the property will pass to the trustee to be distributed among the creditors like other assets of the bankrupt, and he is deemed to have waived the right of exemption, unless he asserts his claim at a time long enough before the time of sale, to prevent a postponement of the same. His right of election is gone if he waits until the sale has taken place. The fact that he has given notice in his schedules filed, that he will claim $300 worth of property to be appraised, will not entitle him to the amount of $300 in cash out of the proceeds or to the property of that value, where he has not specified the articles as claimed by the State law." In re Burman (D. C., Pa.), 11 Am. B. R. 114, 125 Fed. 990, holding that an exemption might be allowed out of the proceeds of the sale of perishable property, sold by receiver under the direction of the court.

Exemptions from proceeds of sale.—Where the bankrupt's property was sold by order of the court, by a receiver appointed the day after the petition in bankruptcy was filed, and prior to the filing of the schedule by the bankrupt and on the day of sale, or before the sale began, he notified the receiver that he claimed his exemption, and specified the property he desired set apart, he was entitled to claim his exemption from the proceeds of the sale. In re Sloan (D. e. Sale by trustee, and exemptions out of proceeds.—While, as a rule, the trustee has no power to sell the exempt property, he must sell it,²⁸⁰ where it is inseparable from other property, the expense of sale to be borne by the general estate,²⁸¹ and the bankrupt is then entitled to his pro rata of the proceeds.²⁸² Thus, where all of a bankrupt's real estate is covered by a mortgage under which the mortgagee would have the right to sell and convey the title in fee discharged of any exemption, and the mortgagee submits his claim to the bankruptcy court, it may sell the land and allot the bankrupt his homestead from the proceeds, but it has no power to order the amount paid to the mortgagee.²⁸³ The bankrupt, having made claim for his exemption within the time fixed by the act, is not debarred because the goods were sold with his consent,²⁸⁴ and where an exemption will be defeated unless its allowance be in cash out of the proceeds of a sale, it will, if practicable, be ordered paid out of such proceeds.²⁸⁵

f. Exceptions to trustee's report.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The trustee first determines what is exempt.²⁸⁶ General Order XVII requires the trustee to report to the court in twenty days after receiving notice of his appointment, the articles set apart to the bankrupt as exempt, "and any creditor may take exceptions to the determination of the trustee within twenty days after the filing of the report." This expressly authorizes a creditor to take exceptions rendered impossible by reason of liens thereon, and then transferring to the bankrupt out of the proceeds $500 in lieu of his homestead exemption, is neither in compliance with the Ohio statute nor a proper execution of the Bankruptcy Act.

Where the real estate of a voluntary bankrupt was sold for less than the amount of mortgages thereon, but the personal estate realized a considerable amount and the schedules filed with the petition for adjudication included a claim for exemption in cash out of the proceeds of the sale of real estate or the proceeds of the sale of personalty, the bankrupt cannot be said as a matter of law, to have waived the right of exemptions in personal property by failing to claim them by way of selection before sale. Matter of Stitt (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 41 Am. B. R. 777, 252 Fed. 1.

A claim of $500.00 exemption from personal estate in lieu of a homestead may be allowed under the Ohio law, where the bankrupt made a proper claim in his amended schedules, and where the homestead was covered by valid mortgages in excess of its scheduled and appraised value and was surrendered to the mortgagees to save them and the bankrupt estate from expense, and where he owned no other real estate. Matter of Radcliffe (D. C., Ohio), 39 Am. B. R. 612, 243 Fed. 716. See also Matter of Hewitt (D. C., Ohio), 40 Am. B. R. 6, 244 Fed. 245.

Sale of exempt property without notice to bankrupt.—Where, prior to his adjudication, a bankrupt is deprived of the possession of his property, by a receiver of his firm, appointed by a State court, and the trustee in bankruptcy sells the property, upon its being turned over to him, without notice to the bankrupt and without giving him an opportunity to make his selection of exempt property before the sale, the bankrupt is entitled to be paid his exemptions in cash from the proceeds of such sale. *In re Andrews v. Setting aside exemptions by referee upon trustee's refusal so to do; payment out of proceeds.—Where a bankrupt has complied with section 7-a (8) of the bankruptcy act by indicating in his schedule the property he selected to have set apart to cover his exemptions, it is the duty of the trustee, whose duties are merely administrative to set the same aside for his use, and upon the trustee's refusal so to do, it is proper for the referee to award the bankrupt his exemptions. Where exempt property, for which a bankrupt has duly made claim has been converted and sold, the bankrupt is entitled to be allowed his exemptions out of the proceeds of the sale, since property that is exempt, forms no part of the bankrupt's estate, so as to permit the bankruptcy court to acquire any right to administer upon or distribute it. In re Finklestein (D. to the determination of the trustee.²⁸⁷ The determination of the trustee is not final; if exceptions are filed within twenty days the referee decides the issue. Until exceptions are filed there is no issue.²⁸⁸ A creditor must file his exceptions within twenty days after the filing of the report; he will not be permitted to come in after the expiration of that time and file objections or add new and additional grounds to those already filed.²⁸⁹ Where objections are made before the referee to a bankrupt's claim for exemptions it is proper practice for the referee to decide the question, and for the unsuccessful party to take the matter to the District Court.²⁹⁰

(2) WHO MAY TAKE EXCEPTIONS; RIGHT OF BANKRUPT.—The language of the General Order would seem to indicate that only creditors may except to the report of the trustee setting apart the bankrupt's exemptions and the referee's action thereon. It may be doubted whether the order should be construed as restricting the right of a bankrupt to take exceptions to the determination of the trustee as to his exemptions.²⁹¹ If it be established that the duty of the trustee in setting apart the bankrupt's exemptions is ministerial,²⁹² it would follow that he would be bound by the claim of the bankrupt, and his report would be conclusive upon the bankrupt. The General Order indicates that the trustee is to make a determination. The bankrupt

R. 723, 124 Fed. 417. Exceptions filed more than twenty days after the filing of the trustee's report must be dismissed. Matter of Amos (Ref., Ga.), 19 Am. B. R. 804. And a failure to file exceptions or contest the bankrupt's claim will deprive the creditor of his right to reopen the matter. In re Reese (D. C., Ala.), 8 Am. B. R. 411, 115 Fed. 993.

Necessity for notice to creditors.—An objection to a trustee's report refusing to set aside an exemption is only a continuation of the proceeding initiated by making the claim for exemption in the schedules, and no notice to creditors of a hearing before the referee is necessary. Sheridan State Bank v. Rowell (D. C., Ore.), 32 Am. B. R. 747, 212 Fed. 529.

292. Trustee acts ministerially.—In the case of In re Campbell (D. C., Va.), 10 Am. B. R. 723, 124 Fed. 417, the court said: "But the trustee acts as a mere ministerial agent. Ordinarily the creditors do not appear before the trustee; they are allowed to, and I think usually do, wait until the report of the trustee is filed, and then they make their objections by excepting to the report. The Bankrupt Act requires the trustee to put his own valuation on the property claimed as exempt. And unless the bankrupt should claim a greater value than the State law allows him, the act does not seem to authorize the trustee to exercise any discretion. Having valued the property, his duty is to set it apart and make a report. His action is in no sense even a quasi-judicial finding that the exemption is properly allowable. There is no issue on this question until exceptions are filed to his report. And on that issue as above stated, the bankrupt clearly has the affirmative."

may assert a claim of exemptions which does not conform to the State law. He may assert a claim to articles which are not allowable and may claim a greater value than he is entitled to. Section 47-a (11) makes it the duty of the trustee to set apart the bankrupt's exemptions. It is difficult to understand how this may be done without determining the validity of the claim to exemptions under the State law. In performing this duty the trustee acts in a quasi-judicial capacity. If he denies the bankrupt's right to a specified exemption, and refuses to set it apart, the bankrupt should be permitted as a matter of right to come before the referee and object to the trustee's determination.

(3) REPORT AND EXCEPTIONS AS PLEADINGS.—The exception to a trustee's report is in some sense a pleading, and the better practice is to verify it, although a failure to verify would probably not be fatal.²⁹³ The report of the trustee and the exceptions of creditors constitute the pleadings.²⁹⁴ It is not necessary to plead the exemption laws of the State, as the Federal courts will take judicial notice of the laws of all the States.²⁹⁵

g. Allowance of exemptions; proof required.—The bankrupt should show by a preponderance of proof, that he is entitled to the exemption where there is an issue on the question as to whether the exemption is allowable.²⁹⁶ Although a law allowing exemptions is always to be construed liberally and in favor of the debtor,²⁹⁷ yet, the burden of proving that property comes within the list of exemptions rests upon the claimant. He must bring himself and his property clearly within the statute.²⁹⁸ The bankrupt is not entitled to trial by jury of the issues raised by the exceptions.²⁹⁹ A referee's findings of fact on a claim to exemptions will not be disturbed unless palpably erroneous,³⁰⁰ but where a trustee has been dispensed with, the judge cannot review the decision of the referee.³⁰¹ The bankrupt having sold goods after the filing of the petition for adjudication and used the proceeds, the amount thereof should be deducted in the allowance of his exemptions.³⁰² Where, to entitle any one to the benefits of a homestead exemption statute, he is required to cause "homestead" to be entered in the margin of his record title to the same, such entry may not be made after the qualification of his trustee in bankruptcy.³⁰³ Where a homestead exemption is allowed by a State statute up to a certain amount, and such exemption is claimed in land valued at more than such amount, the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to determine the time and manner of setting

SECTION SEVEN.

DUTIES OF BANKRUPTS.

§ 7. Duties of bankrupts.—a. The bankrupt shall (1) attend the first meeting of his creditors, if directed by the court or a judge thereof to do so, and the hearing upon his application for a discharge, if filed; (2) comply with all lawful orders of the court; (3) examine the correctness of all proofs of claims filed against his estate; (4) execute and deliver such papers as shall be ordered by the court; (5) execute to his trustee transfers of all his property in foreign countries; (6) immediately inform his trustees of any attempt, by his creditors or other persons, to evade the provisions of this act, coming to his knowledge; (7) in case of any person having to his knowledge proved a false claim against his estate, disclose that fact immediately to his trustee; (8) prepare, make oath to, and file in court within ten days, unless further time is granted, after the adjudication, if an involuntary bankrupt, and with the petition if a voluntary bankrupt, a schedule of his property, showing the amount and kind of property, the location thereof, its money value in detail, and a list of his creditors, showing their residences, if known, if unknown, that fact to be stated, the amounts due each of them, the consideration thereof, the security held by them, if any, and a claim for such exemptions as he may be entitled to, all in triplicate, one copy of each for the clerk, one for the referee, and one for the trustee; and (9) when present at the first meeting of his creditors, and at such other times as the court shall order, submit to an examination concerning the conducting of his business, the cause of his bankruptcy, his dealings with his creditors and other persons, the amount, kind, and whereabouts of his property, and, in addition, all matters which may affect the administration and settlement of his estate; but no testimony given by him shall be offered in evidence against him in any criminal proceeding.

Provided, however, That he shall not be required to attend a meeting of his creditors, or at or for an examination at a place more than one hundred and fifty miles distant from his home or principal place of business, or to examine claims except when presented to him, unless ordered by the court, or a judge thereof, for cause shown, and the bankrupt shall be paid his actual expenses from the estate when examined or required to attend at any place other than the city, town or village of his residence.

I. MISCELLANEOUS DUTIES

a. Attendance on meetings.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The first statutory duty of the bankrupt prescribed by this section is to “attend the first meeting of his creditors, if directed by the court or a judge thereof to do so, and the hearing upon his application for a discharge, if filed.” Four things should be noted: (a) The bankrupt is not obliged to attend the first or any other meeting of creditors, unless ordered to do so; (b) if his home or usual place of business is more than one hundred and fifty miles from the place of meeting, he cannot be required to attend save for cause shown; (c) if ordered to attend a meeting other than in the place of his residence, he is entitled to actual expenses out of the estate; and (d) that, none of these limitations seeming to apply to a hearing on discharge; he must attend such a hearing, wherever it is and at his own expense, even though not ordered to do so.¹

(2) PROVISIONS OF ACT OF 1867.—There was no like clause in the act of 1867. Under the former law, it was held that, in the absence of an order to attend, the bankrupt might stay away;² and that, for sickness or other good cause, he might be excused;³ but that he must, when ordered, attend a meeting called to consider a proposed composition.⁴

(3) PRESENCE OF BANKRUPT REQUIRED.—Under the present law, it has been said that the bankrupt is required and should be present at the first meeting of the creditors to aid the referee in assisting the creditors.⁵ The

1. Attendance at hearing on discharge.—In Matter of Carle (D. C., Cal.), 33 Am. B. R. 502, 217 Fed. 688, it was held that a bankrupt might not avoid attendance at the hearing upon his application for a discharge by removing from the district pending bankruptcy proceedings, and that this would be so even if the provision that a bankrupt may not be required to attend at a place more than 150 miles from his home or place of business did apply to applications for a discharge. In re Shanker (D. C., Pa.), 15 Am. B. R. 109, 138 Fed. 862, quoting this paragraph with approval, and holding that a referee, if requested, must require the attendance of the bankrupt on a hearing upon objections to his discharge.

2. In re Dumahaut, Fed. Cas. 4,124.

3. In re Carpenter, Fed. Cas. 2,427.

4. In re Scott et al., Fed. Cas. 12,519.

5. In re Eagles & Crisp (D. C., No. Car.), 3 Am. B. R. 733, 99 Fed. 695. This case is a brief monograph on practice at meetings of creditors, and the statement therein that a bankrupt is required to be present at the first meeting, apparently whether ordered to do so or not, may be questioned.

bankrupt's presence is not indispensable.⁶ In the case of a bankrupt corporation the attendance of its officers may be required.⁷

(4) ATTENDANCE AT DISTANCE; EXPENSES.—The proviso at the end of this section does not require the attendance of the bankrupt at a place more than 150 miles from his home or principal place of business, and provides for the payment of his expenses from the estate when he is required to attend at any place other than the city, town or village of his residence. But where the bankrupt voluntarily removes from the district pending bankruptcy proceedings this proviso does not require the payment of his expenses,⁸ or excuse him from attendance at hearings on his application for a discharge.⁹

(5) PRACTICE.—By Form No. 14, the bankrupt is at the time of the adjudication ordered to appear before referee on a day certain. This in actual practice should be forthwith, since, under the words of the form and of General Order XII (1), there is doubt whether the referee acquires jurisdiction until he does so. In some districts, this day is fixed as that for the first meeting of creditors and, if so, the bankrupt must attend. The more common practice, however, is to notify the attorney in charge to produce the bankrupt at the time of the first meeting, a practice somewhat loose, as not probably amounting to such an order as to require the bankrupt's presence under this subsection, or sufficient to predicate thereon a report for contempt under § 41-a (1) and b. If once ordered to attend a meeting, he must attend every continuance of the meeting; but a referee will not permit the bankrupt to be harrassed by repeated applications for adjournments. When the presence of the bankrupt seems not likely to be required at a continuance or at subsequent continuances, he should be excused and a minute made of such order.¹⁰

b. Obedience to lawful orders.—The section requires the bankrupt to "comply with all lawful orders of the court." "Bankrupt" includes any person against whom a petition has been filed.¹¹ "Bankrupt" includes any person files a petition in bankruptcy he submits himself personally to the jurisdiction of the court and becomes bound to obey its orders and directions, even before adjudication.¹² It is not for the bankrupt or his counsel to determine whether the order is lawful.¹³ What are lawful orders depends on many facts, such as jurisdiction, and the like, and such orders may be concerning any of the numerous acts which, under the law, a bankrupt and his creditors or other persons may be required to do or to refrain from doing.¹⁴ Thus, the court may order a bankrupt to turn over to his trustee goods found to be in the possession or under the control of the bankrupt.¹⁵ But the failure to turn over property which is not in the bankrupt's possession and over which he has no control, does not constitute contempt;¹⁶ and he has a right to a hearing before he can be committed for contempt.¹⁷ An order will not be granted directing bankrupts to turn over assets where neither the report of the commissioner nor the proofs show accurately just what and how much property was concealed.¹⁸ If a bankrupt explains a discrepancy as to goods purchased by him prior to his bankruptcy, a summary order to turn over such goods should not be granted.¹⁹ An order stands until it is modified or withdrawn by the court²⁰ even though the court be without jurisdiction.²¹ This may be accomplished by a personal appearance and motion to that end, or the court may act proprio motu. It has been held that the order need not necessarily be in writing;²² indeed, referees often give oral directions to the bankrupt which, if properly noted on their record books, are as effective for all purposes (including a proceeding to punish for contempt) as if reduced to writing and actually served. It is under this subsection that referees frequently report contempts growing out of a bankrupt's refusal to obey an order requiring the surrender of money or property in his possession.²³ In a turnover proceeding the issue is whether the bankrupt had property within his possession or control at the date of the bankruptcy which he had concealed from his trustee, while in a contempt proceeding the only question is whether the bankrupt is presently able to comply with the turnover order previously made.^{23a} Punishment for a refusal to obey a lawful order may be by fine or imprisonment, or by both.²⁴ Since the amendatory act of 1903, there is a further penalty,—the refusal of a discharge.²⁵

R. 615, wherein the court said: "I am of the opinion that a fair and reasonable construction of that clause [clause (1) of section 7, paragraph a] does not make it mandatory or an absolute requirement of the bankrupt to be present at either the first meeting of the creditors, or at the hearing upon application for discharge, unless directed by the court or a judge thereof to do so."

c. Examination of claims and notification of trustee of proof of false claims.—Subdivisions 3 and 7 of this section should be considered together. The former makes it the duty of the bankrupt to "examine the correctness of all proofs of claims filed against his estate;" and the latter requires him to notify the trustee "in case of any person having to his knowledge proved a false claim against his estate."²⁶ The section further limits this duty by providing in the proviso at the end thereof that he shall not be required "to examine claims except when presented to him unless ordered by the court or a judge thereof for cause shown."²⁷ In actual practice, these subsections are rarely construed.

Election of remedies.—The action of a trustee in petitioning the court to compel the bankrupt to pay the surrender value of a policy of life insurance as a condition of keeping the same, amounts to an election of remedies, and where an order is entered in the District Court refusing to compel the bankrupt to pay the surrender value of the policy, the trustee cannot thereafter proceed by petition to compel him to pay the loan value of the same policy as a condition of keeping it. 25. See Bankr. Act, § 14-b(6), post.

The importance of a personal examination of all proofs of claims by the bankrupt is apparent, especially if he kept no books or his business records are unreliable. As a rule, the bankrupt sits by at the call of claims on the first meeting and informs the referee whether they are correct. He may, of course, be put on oath, if desired. He should also be frequently consulted by the trustee concerning the correctness of claims subsequently presented. At all times until his discharge, or until the final closing of administration if the discharge is granted sooner, it is his duty to inform the trustee immediately in case he knows that a false claim has been proven. There seems to be no penalty, either by contempt or as for the commission of a crime, in case the bankrupt fails to perform these duties.²⁸ He also has sufficient standing to move to expunge a false claim, though where there is a trustee, the latter, as the representative of all the creditors, should do this.²⁹

d. Execution and delivery of papers.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Subdivisions 4 and 5 require the bankrupt "to execute and deliver such papers as shall be ordered by the court," and "to execute to his trustee transfers of all his property in foreign countries." Under the former law, a formal assignment was given the assignee (trustee) by the judge or register (referee).³⁰ This seems to have been for record purposes, a difficulty now met by the requirement permitting the recording of the order approving the trustee's bond in the proper record office,³¹ and the new subsection requiring the recording of a copy of the adjudication.³² No formal assignment is now necessary; the assets of the bankrupt at the time the petition was filed, by operation of law, passing, as of the date of the adjudication, to the trustee subsequently appointed.³³ When, however, the property is subject to the laws of another nation, a formal instrument, evidencing the transfer, often becomes necessary, and must then be executed by the bankrupt.³⁴

(2) EXECUTION OF NECESSARY PAPERS TO PASS TITLE TO TRUSTEE.—Under the broad terms of these subdivisions, the court may order the bankrupt to execute any other papers; as, for instance, such consents as will permit the substitution of the trustee in a suit pending in a State court.³⁵ Under the present law, a bankrupt may be compelled to execute an assignment of a liquor license,³⁶ or to join in a petition by the receiver for a transfer of the license to the purchaser thereof at the receiver's sale.³⁷ He may be required to transfer his interest in an insurance policy,³⁸ or to execute a power of attorney to exercise options under a tontine insurance policy at and after the expiration

R. 550, 161 Fed. 604, holding that in the absence of evidence that the defendant bankrupt had neither examined or approved claims filed against his estate, they are not competent as admissions on his part as to ownership or possession of property, and the admission of such evidence was erroneous and prejudicial.

Statute of limitations.—Where it does not appear that a bankrupt examined a claim, the allowance thereof, although sufficient and controlling as a judgment for the purpose of the bankruptcy proceeding, does not affect the running of the statute of limitations. American Woolen Co. v. Samuelsohn (N. Y. Ct. of App.), 43 Am. B. R. 530, 123 N. E. 154.

Necessity that license be of benefit to estate.—Where licensing boards upon the unconditional surrender of a liquor license customarily grant a new one in its place and refund part of the fee paid for the surrendered license, the licensee may be ordered to surrender his license and assign his rights in the refund to his trustee in bankruptcy. Matter of Beahn (D. of the tontine period.³⁹ The court may compel the bankrupt to execute such papers as may be necessary to transfer a seat in a stock exchange.⁴⁰ The power has been exercised to compel the transfer of personal rights and privileges, such as patents and trademarks,⁴¹ a license of a stall in a market,⁴² and commissions on renewal premiums of life insurance policies.⁴³

e. Notification of trustee of attempt to evade act.—Subdivision 6 requires the bankrupt to "immediately inform his trustee of any attempt, by his creditors or other persons, to evade the provisions of this act, coming to his knowledge." "To evade the provisions of the act" refers only to an attempted evasion within the bankrupt's knowledge. If the evasion be an accomplished fact, that there was an attempt to evade would probably follow. It would seem, too, that the attempt can be predicated on acts antedating the filing of the petition, as the acceptance of a preference voidable under § 60-b, or the completion of a fraudulent transfer, with knowledge on the part of the transferee, under § 67-e, and as well of those that are in the law deemed continuing as of those actually after the bankrupt.⁴⁴ There is, however, no penalty for failure to perform this duty. This is unfortunate. Were punishment prescribed and enforcement against the bankrupt's person possible, frauds on creditors, due to evasions of the provisions of the act, would rarely occur.

II. PREPARATION AND FILING OF SCHEDULES.

a. In general.—Subdivision 8 of this section provides for the preparation and filing by the bankrupt of a schedule showing the kind and value of his property, a list of his creditors and a claim for such exemptions as he may be entitled to.⁴⁵ This provision as to the filing of schedules is imperative⁴⁶ and one of the most important duties performed by a bankrupt's attorney consists in the preparation of his schedules. The form prescribed⁴⁷ is carefully subdivided and elaborate in its invitation to details. The schedules often become of vital importance when application is made for a discharge, or when the discharge is pleaded in bar against a creditor at the time of the bankruptcy. The necessity for careful investigation increases proportionately to the remoteness in point of time of the failure whence came the debts. No voluntary petition should be filed until the attorney in charge—by questioning and investigating the books of the debtor, and tracing the ownership of, not merely ordinary debts like accounts and notes, but also, from an examination of the

43. Commissions on renewal premiums.—In the case of In re Wright (D. C., N. Y.), 18 Am. B. R. 198, 151 Fed. 361, the court said: "Under the terms of the agreement in controversy, the commissions did not accrue until the renewal premiums were actually paid; but, as the services in procuring the insurance have actually been performed by the agent, the liability of the insurance company to pay such commissions become fixed and absolute, and the insurance company is released from its obligation to pay the commissions only when the policy lapses, or the insured dies, or, as stated in the contract, when the renewal premiums or notes are unpaid. It is clearly apparent from the record, that there exists a reasonable expectation that a substantial portion of the commissions specified in the contract will become due and payable. Such being the fact, the right to receive commissions for insurance procured by an agent is unquestionably assignable."

records, of judgments and unliquidated liabilities like bonds or notes accompanying mortgages — is reasonably certain that he knows every financial obligation of his client, its actual then owner, and the post-office address of that owner. The property interests of the debtor, whether present, future, or contingent, should also be carefully ascertained, as should the exemptions allowed by the State law. Not until all these facts are in hand and summarized should the lawyer begin drawing the papers.⁴⁸

b. When to be prepared and filed.—It is the bankrupt's duty to file the schedules with a voluntary petition, or, if the proceeding be involuntary, within ten days after the adjudication, unless further time is granted.⁴⁹ For the place where such petition must be filed, and by and against whom it can be filed, reference should be had to the appropriate sections.⁵⁰

c. By whom to be prepared and filed.—The schedules may be prepared and filed either by the bankrupt, by the creditors, or by the referee. Thus, if the bankrupt, in an involuntary case, fails to prepare and file them within ten days, or where the bankrupt otherwise fails, refuses, or neglects so to do, the referee must do or cause it to be done;⁵¹ to this end the bankrupt may be ordered to appear and testify. This provision, however, seems to be modified by General Order IX. By its terms, in involuntary cases, the initiative is put on the petitioning creditors. If the bankrupt can be served with notice, his failure to file schedules entitles them to an attachment against his person;⁵² if he cannot be found, they must file a schedule giving the names and places of residence of all the creditors, according to their best information. They, as a rule, know little or nothing about the other creditors. Hence where the bankrupt has disappeared, in some districts a practice has grown up of bringing into court on subpoenas all persons who would be likely to know the facts, and, in a preliminary proceeding, on the evidence of such persons, making up the list required. Such a procedure is certainly within the broad powers conferred on courts of bankruptcy, and may be instituted either by the petitioning or other creditors, or by the referee himself. Such schedules, when prepared, should, of course, be in triplicate, and conform as nearly as possible to those which make a part of Form No. 1, though they need give only names and addresses. Proceedings to compel filing may be instituted by creditors, although the trustee is the proper person to do so; in case of a corporation the order may be directed to the treasurer, as the officer who should know the facts essential for the preparation of the schedules.⁵³

d. Punishment for failure to file.—A bankrupt may be adjudged guilty of contempt of court for refusing and neglecting to file a schedule as required by

48. The importance of these suggestions cannot be too strongly emphasized. Starting right will save many delays and much annoyances later, and, to the bankrupt, may amount to a discharge that can be relied on as a stout bar to all possible suits, or a mere reed that will bend and break when most needed.

R. 835, 158 Fed. 679, the court said: "The bankrupt must file his schedules in court according to § 7-a (8) within ten days after adjudication. It may be true, as the referee says, that there can be no objection to the bankrupt voluntarily filing them at any time. But the filing contemplated in § 12-a must, I think, if the most natural and reasonable construction is sought, be the filing required by § 7-a (8)."

this section.⁵⁴ In the Southern District of New York, a bankrupt who refuses or neglects to file his schedules is fined, in the first instance, a sufficient sum to compensate the attorneys for making the motion to punish the contempt; if the imposition of such fine is ineffectual, punishment by imprisonment is inflicted.⁵⁵

c. Use of schedules as evidence.—The use of the bankrupt's schedules in criminal proceedings against the bankrupt for concealment, conspiracy and the like, is permissible, and is not now held to be an invasion of the bankrupt's constitutional rights.⁵⁶ Some courts have held that schedules may be used as evidence in an action to recover an unlawful preference,⁵⁷ while others have reached the opposite conclusion.⁵⁸ Diverse decisions have been made as to the admissibility of the schedules in a criminal prosecution for receiving deposits in an insolvent bank.⁵⁹

f. Framing schedules.—(1) IN GENERAL.—As under the act of 1867, the forms accompanying the general orders include a form for schedules. It has been held that a failure to use this form warrants a dismissal of the petition.⁶⁰ Manifestly the use of the form is in the interest of uniformity and for the convenience of the courts and parties; but a failure to precisely observe the form is not necessarily fatal.⁶¹ Schedules conforming substantially to the requirements of the statute but not necessarily to the rules and forms are sufficient.⁶² The form prescribed covers property in reversion, remainder or expectancy, includes property held in trust for the debtor, or subject to any power or right to dispose of or to charge, including a particular statement of property which had been conveyed for the benefit of creditors.⁶³ General Order V provides that the schedules shall be written out plainly, without abbreviation or interlineation, except where such abbreviation and interlineation may be for the purpose of reference. As the schedules must be filed in triplicate, the use of those blanks that are so printed as to permit their being typewritten and, therefore, manifolded, is advised. It should be noted also that the statute requires that the schedules only be in triplicate. The petition may be a separate paper, though this is unusual. The schedules divide themselves naturally into three parts, (a) of creditors, (b) of assets, and (c) of exemptions. The official form, however, includes the exemption in the property schedule. The official form prescribes in extensive detail the items to be included. Care should be used in observing this form. It would serve no useful purpose to describe this form in this place. The form must be examined and applied to the fullest possible extent to the circumstances of each particular case.

But in the case of In re City Contracting & Bldg. Co. (D. C., Hawaii), 30 Am. B. R. 133, it was said by way of dictum that a statement of assets and liabilities which did not furnish a direct and full answer to each item of the official form of schedules adopted by the Supreme Court is insufficient.

(2) SCHEDULE OF CREDITORS AND LIABILITIES.—By far the most important schedule is that of creditors.⁶⁴ Its purpose is threefold: (a) to give the court information as to the persons entitled to notice, (b) to inform the trustee as to the claims against the estate and the considerations on which they rest, and (c) to an extent at least, to limit the effect of the bankrupt's discharge to parties to the proceeding. It follows that the requirements of the statute—"a list of his creditors, showing their residences, if known, if unknown, that fact to be stated, the amounts due to each of them, the consideration thereof, the security held by them, if any, and a claim for such exemptions as he may be entitled to," should be strictly observed. It has been held that ditto marks should not be used.⁶⁵ The practice of writing the word "none" where the facts come within the terms of the forms is now quite universal and should be followed. The names of creditors should be written with care.⁶⁶ Yet the listing of a creditor by an initial, instead of the full Christian name, is not necessarily a fatal defect.⁶⁷ It has been held that a debt is not "duly scheduled" if the name of the creditor has been improperly spelled.⁶⁸ When the creditor is a copartnership whose claim has been reduced to judgment in favor of the individuals, the names both of the firm and of the individuals should be set out. Even greater care should be observed in addresses. Schedules are defective if they do not contain the residences of the creditors or show that they are unknown.⁶⁹ It seems that a Sufficiency of residence statement.—A schedule which gives a street number as the residence of a creditor but omits the name of the city is insufficient. Troy v. Rudnick (Mass. Sup. Jud. Ct.), 198 Mass. 563, 85 N. E. 177; Sutherland v. Lasher (N. Y. Sup. Ct.), 41 Misc. (N. Y.), 249, 11 Am. B. R. 780, 84 N. Y. Supp. 56. debt is not "duly scheduled" when the office address instead of the residence is given in the schedule under the designation of residence.⁷⁰ If the residence cannot be ascertained, that fact must be stated, and the proper practice requires that the bankrupt shall state what efforts he has made to ascertain the residence.⁷¹ Where the residence of the creditor is scheduled as "unknown," when, in fact, the bankrupt has knowledge thereof, a judgment in favor of the creditor will not be affected by the discharge of the bankrupt.⁷² A schedule listing a creditor's residence as in a certain city, without giving his street and number, is prima facie sufficient.⁷³ But if a wrong address of a creditor is inserted in the schedule, so that it is fair to assume that he did not receive notice of the proceedings, he will not be affected thereby and a discharge of the bankrupt will not be a defense in an action by the creditor on his claim.⁷⁴ All creditors should be scheduled, even those barred by the statute of limitations; but scheduling the latter is not a revival of the debt,⁷⁵ although it may be different in case of a voluntary bankruptcy, where it afterwards happens that the bankrupt was not insolvent.⁷⁶ Accuracy is not so important in stating the amount of the debt, its consideration, or when and where contracted; but these facts should be fully set out when possible. The description of securities should be sufficient to inform the court of their value, should a motion be made at the first meeting to adjust the same for voting purposes.⁷⁷ Where a claim has been reduced to judgment, it may be scheduled in the name of the record holder although the bankrupt knows that the claim has been assigned to another person.⁷⁸ The effect on the discharge of the omission of creditors from the schedule is discussed under section seventeen, post.

(3) SCHEDULE OF ASSETS.—The words of the statute require this schedule to show "the amount and kind of property, the location thereof," and "its money value in detail." What has been said in the previous paragraph as to accuracy and details applies with equal force here. The oath to this schedule calls for an affidavit that it is a statement of "all his estate, both real and personal;" words which mean what they say.⁷⁹ While, where the omission of assets is charged, it is not usually difficult to show either mistake in law or want of intent, the only safe way is to schedule all interests in property,⁸⁰ including of course, property claimed to be exempt, whether such property seems to pass to the trustee or not.⁸¹ Property transferred by the bankrupt by general assignment or otherwise, if his act will be voidable by his trustee, as well as all property fraudulently conveyed, should be included.⁸² A grantee of lands subject to a trust for the benefit of the grantor takes an interest in the lands and must schedule the same upon becoming a bankrupt.⁸³ A bank account should be scheduled as an asset.⁸⁴ Where a tenant has a three-fourths interest in growing crops, such interest should be scheduled.⁸⁵ Where the individual property of the bankrupt is mingled with property of an estate of which he is the administrator, it is his duty to prepare the schedules so as to distinguish the individual property from that held in the representative capacity.⁸⁶ Property acquired by the bankrupt between the filing of the petition and the adjudication should not be scheduled,⁸⁷ nor a mere expectancy dependent upon contingencies.^{87a} property sold.⁹¹ Where a schedule, duly filed by an involuntary bankrupt, contains a claim for exemptions, the bankrupt is entitled thereto out of the proceeds of a receiver's sale of all the assets made prior to the filing of the schedules.⁹² The bankrupt is not permitted to omit from his schedules cash on hand or any other property on his claim that he is entitled thereto as an exemption; such a course, if permitted, would defeat one of the plain provisions of the law and deprive the creditors of their rights.⁹³ His claim of exemptions must be filed with his schedules as a part thereof; this is the practice indicated by the statute and the official forms. While the State statute controls as to the amount and kind of exemptions, the time and manner of claiming them are regulated by the bankrupt act,⁹⁴ and a claim therefor in the schedules of an involuntary bankrupt will be regarded as effective.⁹⁵ The future action of the trustees in setting apart the bankrupt's exemptions is based upon the schedules containing the claim, and it is the assertion of the claim in this manner which gives the court jurisdiction.⁹⁶ The form of the schedule, B (5), recognizes the propriety of estimating the value of the articles claimed and of mentioning the State statute under which the exemption is claimed.

(5) VERIFICATION.—The previous statute required the schedules to be verified before a Federal officer. Now, they can be verified before a State officer.⁹⁷ The oaths, like each separate sheet of the schedules, should be signed by the bankrupt. As the official forms are now printed, space is not provided for the signature. It is not thought, however, that a separate verification is so essential as to affect jurisdiction provided the schedules accompany the petition; the oath to the latter, when coupled with its reference to the schedules and what they contain, complies with the statute.⁹⁸

g. Amendment of schedules.⁹⁹—It is the referee's duty to cause incomplete or defective schedules to be amended.¹⁰⁰ This he can do on his own motion, or in response to an application under General Order XI. held, an amendment may deprive a creditor brought in of his right to participate in the choice of trustee, and, therefore, the reason for the omission should appear to be sufficient.¹⁰¹ While omitted creditors may be added by amendment, yet such amendment relates to the date of the filing of the petition.^{101a} Under the former law, it was held that amendments might be made, even after objections had been filed to a discharge.¹⁰² This is undoubtedly so under the present law, but the utmost good faith should appear.¹⁰³ An application to amend a schedule by inserting a creditor's name and claim will be denied when made within a few days of the end of the year from his adjudication,¹⁰⁴ and ordinarily a discharge will not be opened to permit a bankrupt to amend his schedules;¹⁰⁵ but it has been held in an exceptional case that a discharge might be opened to permit an amendment of the schedules by the insertion of a claim omitted through a mistake of law,¹⁰⁶ where the creditor was still in position to file his claim. If, on an examination of a bankrupt, it is shown that he has failed to schedule property which should be surrendered to his trustee, he may be permitted to correct his schedule.¹⁰⁷ Both petition and order should be in triplicate, and the copies intended for the clerk and the trustee should be immediately sent them by the referee. As already suggested the schedules may be amended to include a claim of exemption.¹⁰⁸ A suggested practice on amendments of this character is set out in the foot-note.¹⁰⁹

III. PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF BANKRUPT.¹¹⁰

109. Amendment of schedules; practice.—1. Prior to the time set for, or before the transaction of any other business at, the first meeting of creditors, a petition and schedules or other papers may be amended and new parties may be brought in, as of course and without notice, unless otherwise ordered. Except as hereinbefore in this rule provided, at or after the first meeting of creditors, a petition and schedules or other papers shall not be amended in any material matter, except on an application, made either at a stated meeting or hearing, or upon motion and cause shown, after due notice to the adverse party or the creditor or other party in interest to be affected thereby. In case the amendment will add a party to the proceeding, such party shall be entitled to notice of the motion, and any meeting already noticed may be adjourned for that purpose. If publication is begun or is completed when the motion for the amendment adding other parties is made, further publication as to such parties may be dispensed with.

2. All applications for amendments shall be made by a verified petition addressed to the referee, and the amendments desired shall be set out in separate schedules or paragraphs and in such a way as to bring them clearly to the attention of the referee. Similar schedules or paragraphs shall also be incorporated in any order granting amendments. Copies of orders which amend a petition and schedules, duly certified by the referee, shall be forthwith filed with the clerk and, if then appointed, with the trustee. administration of the law. It has existed since the very earliest of the English bankruptcy laws. The present English law provides for a public examination even before the first meeting of creditors.¹¹¹ If present at a regular meeting of creditors, the bankrupt may be sworn, if with his consent, and, while there is authority the other way,¹¹² without his consent if so ordered by the court—this under the general powers conferred by § 2 (15) and the broad phrasing of the subdivision under discussion. The clause is to be so construed as to require the bankrupt's attendance upon a hearing of objections to a discharge, if requested by the creditors.¹¹³ The purpose of an examination under this provision is to assist in the administration of a bankrupt's property, which the court undertakes only after adjudication.¹¹⁴ And the obligation of a bankrupt to submit to an examination involves the duty of answering material questions truthfully and as intelligently, connectedly and fully as mental equipment will permit.¹¹⁵ The fact that a creditor had not, at or prior to the time of the examination, formally presented his claim does not deprive him of the right to participate in the examination.^{115a}

b. Time of examination.—Under our law, the examination may be had "at the first meeting of creditors or at such other times as the court shall order." This permits an examination before adjudication.¹¹⁶ The intent of this subdivision seems to be that creditors may have an examination of the bankrupt at any time during the pendency of his proceedings.¹¹⁷ This permits of an examination for the purpose of making up the schedules,¹¹⁸ or to lay a foundation for objections to a discharge.¹¹⁹ An examination of the bankrupt may be had, even after his discharge, to ascertain whether he has, after his discharge, concealed property from his trustee.¹²⁰ It has been held that where a bankrupt is present he may be examined without notice,¹²¹ and that he is not entitled to witness fees.¹²² An examination may also be granted though the creditor asking for the same has not filed or formally proved his claim,¹²³ unless the bankrupt can prove that the claim is invalid.¹²⁴

c. How brought on.—At the first meeting of creditors, the referee should ask if an examination of the bankrupt is desired, and, if the bankrupt is present, order it to proceed. If the bankrupt is absent, a direction through his attorney will usually secure his presence. If he is obdurate, the referee may, on his own motion or at the instance of the trustee or any creditor whose claim is proven, make an order requiring his attendance for examination,¹²⁵ and a failure or refusal to attend may be reported as a contempt. If the bankrupt is confined in prison or a State hospital for insane criminals, the court may, in its discretion, grant a writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum compelling the custodian of the bankrupt to produce him for examination.¹²⁶ An application for an order for the examination of a bankrupt is ex parte,¹²⁷ and may be granted at any time before the final disposition of the proceedings,¹²⁸ but where an examination already had is apparently full, an application for a further examination will be refused.¹²⁹ The fact that one creditor has examined the bankrupt is no reason for withholding the privilege from another.¹³⁰ A court of bankruptcy has no power to make an order of arrest, as the basis of extradition proceedings, for the purpose of an examination.¹³¹ The proviso clause of this subdivision and the restrictions as to time, previously noted, are the only limitations, other than a sound discretion, on the granting of this order. The examination, when once begun, should, however, not be unnecessarily prolonged. Nor, after the completion of the main examination and the excuse of the bankrupt, should he be recalled, save for good cause shown.

d. Method of conducting.—The usual method of question and answer is followed, but the rules of evidence are not the same as on ordinary trials. The examination is in the nature of an inquisition, and great latitude is allowed the examiner.¹³² It may be taken down in narrative form, or in the form of question and answer,¹³³ and the referee may, upon the application of the trustee, authorize the employment of a stenographer for that purpose and order his fees paid out of the estate.¹³⁴ The fiction that, in every such case, the trustee has been directed to employ a stenographer, seems quite general throughout the country. It is even the practice to employ such an assistant where there is no estate and to order the bankrupt to deposit with the referee

a sum sufficient for that purpose. This practice, which is claimed to be sanctioned by General Order X, and is usually prescribed in local rules, is clearly within the broad powers conferred on courts of bankruptcy by § 2 (15), and has now been ratified by usage.¹³⁵ The examination, when reduced to writing, should be read over by the bankrupt and subscribed by him,^{135a} but it has been held that where the testimony was not signed by the bankrupt it could be received in evidence on the testimony of the person who took the minutes.¹³⁶ A bankrupt has the right, on his general examination at the first meeting of creditors, or at any other examination, to the attendance and services of counsel,¹³⁷ but it is clearly improper for a former counsel of the bankrupt to conduct his examination on behalf of the trustee.¹³⁸ Whether a bankrupt may consult counsel, before answering a question, is within the discretion of the examining magistrate.¹³⁹ The examination may not be conducted by an attorney in fact who is not also an attorney at law.^{139a} The bankrupt may be cross-examined,¹⁴⁰ but such cross-examination should be conducted as directed by General Order No. 22, in conformity with the mode, existing in courts of law.¹⁴¹ The referee has ample power to administer oaths and compel the production of documents,¹⁴² and need not issue a subpoena duces tecum for that purpose, nor specify in the order the importance of their production.¹⁴³ He should enter on the record any objections to testimony and his rulings thereon, and any offers to prove which he rules out, as well as any statements of counsel or the bankrupt when asserting the latter's constitutional privilege.¹⁴⁴ Excluded testimony should

The expense of thus perpetuating testimony will be at the rate of ten cents (10c.) a folio for both copies, and shall be paid as follows: Where there are no assets, for one reasonable examination, on one day, by the bankrupt and thereafter by the creditor or party in interest for whose benefit or at whose request such examination is had; where there are assets, as may be ordered by the referee in each particular case.

2. After the testimony has been transcribed the attorney in charge of the case will produce each witness before the referee, that such testimony may be signed as provided in General Order XXII.

"Referees may pass upon the competency, materiality and relevancy of evidence in matters properly before them for investigation, and shall have all the powers of the judge concerning the admission or rejection thereof, and shall note on the record all objections, the rulings thereon and the exceptions which may be taken; and in cases where testimony is excluded they shall note a brief statement by the party offering the same of the facts he expects to prove thereby. Referees shall limit the inquiry before them to relevant and material matters, and in case an examination or a cross-examination is unnecessarily prolix, or improperly prolonged, the referee may, in his discretion, limit the time of such examination; or he may impose costs, including the fees of the stenographer be taken down and made a part of the record together with the ruling of the referee on the objections and the exceptions noted.¹⁴⁵ The reason for this procedure is to enable the judge on a review not to reverse a decision made because of the error of the referee in excluding evidence, but to enable such judge at once, without reference back to take such testimony, to determine the issue upon the proper testimony, disregarding that which was improper.¹⁴⁶

e. Subject-matter of the examination.— This is pointed out by the words of the statute, i. e., “concerning the conducting of his business, the cause of his bankruptcy, his dealings with his creditors and other persons, the amount, kind, and whereabouts of his property, and, in addition, all matters which may affect the administration and settlement of his estate.” Broader phrases could not well have been employed.¹⁴⁷ A bankrupt may be required to disclose to the trustee the combination of a safe,¹⁴⁸ and may properly be asked whether he did not, shortly before his bankruptcy, sign a statement upon the strength of which he had obtained credit and merchandise from one of his present creditors.¹⁴⁹ But the examination cannot as a rule be extended to property acquired after the filing of the petition;¹⁵⁰ or the adjudication;¹⁵¹ or to property which does not belong to the bankrupt.¹⁵² On the other hand, it is not limited to transactions during the four months’ period.¹⁵³ The difference between an examination under this subsection and one under § 21-a should always be borne in mind. f. Unsatisfactory answers.— Persistent evasion or refusal on the part of a bankrupt to answer material questions within his knowledge will be considered as contempt and be punishable as such.¹⁵⁵ Thus, under the former law, where the bankrupts had concealed a large sum, and, when questioned, "had told all they knew on the subject," and refused to answer further questions because "they knew no more about the matter," they were punished for contempt.¹⁵⁶ And under the present law it is held that, where he persistently answers "I don't know" to questions about his property, which he must and evidently does know, and could answer fully, he is guilty of contempt.¹⁵⁷ From unsatisfactory answers and other evidence the conclusion is sometimes drawn that the bankrupt is withholding property from his trustee.¹⁵⁸ A bankrupt may be guilty of contempt when he refuses to answer questions and withdraws from the office of the referee;¹⁵⁹ and his testimony may be rejected where it is unworthy of credit.¹⁶⁰

g. Criminating questions.— (1) IN GENERAL.— The once-mooted question as to whether the words "but no testimony given by him shall be offered in evidence against him in any criminal proceeding" amount to the privilege against testifying against himself guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution seems no longer open. It is now well settled that the bankrupt need not answer criminating questions.¹⁶¹ The authorities to the contrary seem not to Committed for contempt.— Where a bankrupt, under examination before a referee, persistently evaded making direct answers to questions concerning the recent sale of a house, about which he could not have been ignorant, and it becomes necessary, because of such conduct, to suspend the examination, he will be committed to jail for contempt. In re Singer (D. C., Pa.), 23 Am. B. R. 28, 174 Fed. 208.

Where a bankrupt's whole examination is a perfectly transparent case of duplicity, intentional evasion and refusal to make any explanation of the facts connected with his bankruptcy, under the pretense of ignorance and stupidity, and he manifests a deliberate determination to conceal all the material facts within his knowledge, he will be adjudged guilty of contempt of court and committed to jail. In re Schulman (D. Evidence insufficient to show contempt.— Where, upon the examination of a bankrupt before a special commissioner as to the keeping of a cash book and its whereabouts, he testified that he last saw the book in the office of the firm shortly before the appointment of the custodian, and did not take it himself but left it where he saw it, and there was no certificate of the special commissioners indicating that in his opinion the witness testified falsely or withheld information, it was held that proceedings to punish the bankrupt for contempt should be dismissed. Matter of Cantor (C. Hitchcock*.¹⁶² The bankrupt may even assert his privilege in response to a petition that he be ordered to surrender property.¹⁶³ Although a bankrupt has a right to claim his privilege against self-incrimination, there must be some basis for the supposed fear.¹⁶⁴ If the court is convinced that an answer to a question cannot by any possibility criminate the bankrupt, and especially if he does not swear that he believes it would, it is the duty of the court to compel him to answer.¹⁶⁵ The inhibition not only protects the bankrupt from the disclosure of facts which would tend to prove his guilt, but also from disclosure of facts which might furnish a clue or a link in a chain of evidence by which a criminal offense might be made known.¹⁶⁶ It seems that the protection extends only to a prosecution in the Federal courts.¹⁶⁷ Section 860 of the Revised Statutes, (now repealed) in force when the incriminating testimony was given, does not prevent the use of such testimony in the prosecution of the witness for perjury.¹⁶⁸

(2) USE OF TESTIMONY ON EXAMINATION.—It is provided in subdivision 9 of clause a of this section that no testimony given by the bankrupt on examination "shall be offered in evidence against him." It has held that full effect may be given to the immunity provision of this subdivision by confining it to the testimony given thereunder,¹⁶⁹ and that the bankrupt is not protected by this clause against the use of his testimony given upon an examination where he has been indicted for perjury in relation to the bankruptcy proceedings.¹⁷⁰

¹⁶⁸ Section 860 of the U. S. Revised Statutes saved the right to use incriminating testimony in the prosecution of a witness for perjury for any legitimate purpose in establishing the charge made. The use of such testimony was not limited to merely proving that it was in fact given. On the prosecution of a bankrupt for perjury in two bankruptcy proceedings, testimony given in one bankruptcy proceeding, not tending to establish perjury in the other, was held to be inadmissible to establish the crime charged in the other proceeding. *Cameron v. Neither does the clause protect him against the use of his testimony where he is charged with contempt in refusing to give testimony.¹⁷¹ This provision does not exempt a bankrupt from prosecution for an unlawful act concerning which he voluntarily testifies, but only provides that his testimony so given cannot be used against him on such prosecution.¹⁷² In order to take advantage of this provision of the statute an objection must be made when the evidence is offered.^{173a}

(3) USE OF BANKRUPT'S BOOKS.—The books of a bankrupt in the possession of the trustee or a receiver are not "testimony" within the meaning of subdivision 9, and they may be used against him.¹⁷³ He may not be compelled to produce books rightfully in his possession, for use in criminal proceedings against him, but the declaration of the rule in the Johnson case would seem to permit their use where they have been transferred to the possession of his trustee in one course of the proceeding.¹⁷⁴ Where a bankrupt asserts his constitutional privilege against an order compelling him to produce books of account alleged to contain incriminating evidence the books should be produced so as to enable the court or referee to determine whether they do in fact contain such evidence; the court or referee may then make an order protecting the bankrupt from the use of such evidence, and at the same time enable the trustee to obtain other necessary information from such books.¹⁷⁵ If the bankrupt surrenders his books without protest or claim of constitutional privilege, he waives such privilege so far as such books are concerned.¹⁷⁶

h. Effect of § 14-b (6).—The amendatory act of 1903 makes the bankrupt's refusal "to obey any lawful order or to answer any material question approved by the court" an objection to a discharge. The new clause is clearly aimed at the difficulty mentioned in the preceding paragraph. Its constitutionality was questioned even in advance of its becoming the law.¹⁷⁷ But the proceeding for a discharge is not a criminal proceeding, and the protection of the witness extends to criminal proceedings only. The privilege of a discharge is not a natural right, or a right of property, but is a matter of favor to be accepted upon such terms as Congress sees fit to impose. Hence this provision does not violate the constitutional immunity.¹⁷⁸

I. COMPARATIVE LEGISLATION.

There is at present no substantial difference between the English, Canadian and American statutes, save that the English and Canadian sections provide for the contingency of death only.¹ But in England the court may, in its discretion, refuse to proceed.² The English practice also permits the service of process on the personal representatives of the debtor, if he dies before such service.³ Our law, in providing that there shall be no abatement after a petition filed, seems to warrant this practice. The analogous section in our statute of 1800 provided only for the due distribution of assets in case of death "after any commission in bankruptcy sued forth." The statute of 1867 was permissive, not mandatory, and was applicable only "after the issue of the warrant" (in this being identical with that of 1800), but had no provision relative to insanity or concerning dower or allowances.⁴

1. Eng. Bankr. Act of 1883, § 108; Can. 145, under the act of 1869, with In re Walker, 54 L. T. N. S. 682, under that of 1883.

II. EFFECT OF BANKRUPT'S DEATH OR INSANITY ON THE PROCEEDINGS.⁵

a. In general.—The language of this section is mandatory. The proceeding "shall not abate" and "shall be conducted and concluded in the same manner, as far as possible," as though the debtor had not died or become insane. It was held under the former law that involuntary proceedings abated on the death of the alleged bankrupt before the trial, but not if the adjudication had been made, even though the warrant had not been issued.⁶ But the rule was different where one of two or more partners died after the filing of a petition against the copartnership.⁷ Under the present statute the filing of a petition begins "the proceedings," and there can be no abatement thereafter,⁸ and therefore the death of a bankrupt after the filing of an involuntary petition, but before the adjudication, does not abate the proceedings,⁹ nor does his death before the service of process upon him effect such result.¹⁰ Likewise, if a party committed an act of bankruptcy while sane, and by reason of such act the court obtained jurisdiction, it can continue the proceedings, notwithstanding the subsequent insanity of the bankrupt.¹¹ The rule as to non-abatement is the same whether the cause be death or insanity, but, if the latter, a committee ad litem should be appointed.¹² This section applies to a corporation seeking to defeat bankruptcy proceedings by a voluntary dissolution begun after the filing of the petition.¹³

b. On right to discharge.—The decisions under the previous law to the effect that a discharge could not be granted where the bankrupt had died after the

The word "bankrupt" in this section refers to a person against whom a petition has been filed, as well as one who has already been adjudicated a bankrupt. In re Larkin (D. C., N. Y.), 21 Am. B. R. 711, 168 Fed. 100.

Where the defense is insanity at the time of the commission of the alleged act of bankruptcy, the issue of insanity must be tried in the bankruptcy court, and while an adjudication of his insanity by a State court after the filing of the petition in bankruptcy may be prima facie evidence of the fact, it does not conclude the bankruptcy court. In re Ward (D. C., N. J.), 20 Am. B. R. 482, 161 Fed. 755. As to effect of findings of a State court upon inquisition issued to determine sanity of an alleged bankrupt, see In re Ward (D. C., N. J.), 28 Am. B. adjudication, are no longer applicable,¹⁴ for the reason that such cases rested on the requirement of that law that the bankrupt should, when applying for his discharge, take a certain oath. No such oath is now necessary, and a discharge will be granted, though the requirement calling for the personal presence of the bankrupt cannot be complied with.¹⁵ It is only possible to successfully oppose the discharge by proving one of the acts described in section fourteen of the bankruptcy act, and such proof may be made whether the bankrupt is sane or insane, living or dead.¹⁶

III. EFFECT OF STATUTORY RIGHTS OF WIDOW AND CHILDREN.

a. In general.—The proviso protects the rights of dower and allowance, granted to the widow and children under State statutes. The clause is a new enactment, but it does not change existing law.¹⁷ The doctrine rests on the principle that the trustee's title is charged with the same liens and burdens, whether actual or inchoate, as was the bankrupt's. It is not material that previous to the bankruptcy proceedings but within the four months' period, the husband had assigned his property for the benefit of creditors,¹⁸ or that he died after the vesting of title in the trustee.¹⁹ But the family has nothing in the nature of a lien and may not enforce their rights, where the bankrupt dies after the trustee has wholly or partially administered the estate, and the property has passed into the hands of purchasers.²⁰ It has been held that, notwithstanding the reference in this section to the laws of the State of the bankrupt's residence, a wife's right of dower in lands situated in another State is protected, although the laws of the State where the bankrupt lives have abrogated the right of dower. This conclusion is reached by reasoning that the wife was entitled to such dower rights independent of the bankruptcy act and that this section is not restrictive but simply saves such rights.²¹

b. Dower and statutory allowances.—What would be the effect of this clause provided the rights or allowances were not actually inchoate at the time the proceedings began, has not yet been decided; the words used would, however, seem sufficient to cover such a case.²² The rule as to dower applies to allowances

Inchoate right of dower.—The proviso of section 8-a, that in case of the death of a bankrupt pending the proceedings, the widow and children shall be entitled to all rights of dower and allowance fixed by the laws of the State of the bankrupt's residence, was intended simply to preserve such rights as already existing, and where a bankrupt is to a widow or children granted by the State statutes. The beneficiaries take them, as if there had been no bankruptcy. Where such allowances are authorized by State statutes the bankruptcy court may make them.²³ If the wife of a bankrupt consents to the sale of real estate free from her dower, she is entitled to the value of such dower as fixed by the laws of the State of the bankrupt's residence.²⁴

SECTION NINE.

PROTECTION AND DETENTION OF BANKRUPTS.

§ 9. Protection and Detention of Bankrupts.—a A bankrupt shall be exempt from arrest upon civil process except in the following cases: (1) When issued from a court of bankruptcy for contempt or disobedience of its lawful orders; (2) when issued from a State court having jurisdiction, and served within such State, upon a debt or claim from which his discharge in bankruptcy would not be a release, and in such case he shall be exempt from such arrest when in attendance upon a court of bankruptcy or engaged in the performance of a duty imposed by this act.

b The judge may, at any time after the filing of a petition by or against a person, and before the expiration of one month after the qualification of the trustee, upon satisfactory proof by the affidavits of at least two persons that such bankrupt is about to leave the district in which he resides or has his principal place of business to avoid examination, and that his departure will defeat the proceedings in bankruptcy, issue a warrant to the marshal, directing him to bring such bankrupt forthwith before the court for examination. If upon hearing the evidence of the parties it shall appear to the court or a judge thereof that the allegations are true and that it is necessary, he shall order such marshal to keep such bankrupt in custody not exceeding ten days, but not imprison him, until he shall be examined and released or give bail conditioned for his appearance for examination, from time to time, not exceeding in all ten days, as required by the court, and for his obedience to all lawful orders made in reference thereto.

I. COMPARATIVE LEGISLATION; SCOPE OF SECTION.

a. Analogous provisions.—The corresponding clause in the English act of 1888 applies both to protection from arrest and to the stay of suits. Under that act a bankrupt from the moment of the receiving order is immune from arrest on civil process.¹ Our first statute exempted the bankrupt from arrest for forty-two days—this, to give ample time for his examination—no matter what the character of the indebtedness, and from an arrest based on a debt owing before the bankruptcy during the pendency of the proceeding. The law of 1867 differed little from the present law, save in omitting entirely the two excepted classes stated in subheads (1) and (2). Minor differences will be discussed later.

b. Scope of section.—This section has undoubtedly a threefold purpose: (a) to preserve unimpaired the authority of the court of bankruptcy over the persons of the parties to the proceeding, (b) to protect the debtor from imprisonment on all civil suits in which the remedy will be barred by the subsequent discharge, and (c), as incidental to the first purpose and analogous to that expressed in § 10, to detain a bankrupt in the district when there seems a likelihood of his departing from it. There are two kinds of protection from arrest, (a) the absolute right, which existed at common law, i. e., while in attendance on court or engaged in performing a duty imposed by the bankruptcy act, and (b) the qualified right, which may not exist as against a liability to which a discharge is not a release, or a warrant or order of commitment based upon a bankrupt's contempt or disobedience of the lawful orders of a court of bankruptcy. The section itself is somewhat narrower than its supplement, General Order XXX.² This same discrepancy existed under the former laws.³ Section 9-a which restricts the immunity of a bankrupt to debts which would be released by a discharge, and General Orders No. 12 and 30, which relate to practice only, and announce no rule as to the effect of a discharge, are in pari materia and should be construed as a whole.⁴ But § 9-b should not be confounded with § 11-a; nor should the right to detain the person be confused with the right to seize that person's property.⁵ And jurisdiction to protect from arrest, which is similar to the jurisdiction to restrain proceedings which may result in arrest, should always be clearly distinguished from it.⁶ It should be noted also that the General Order XXX refers only to cases where the bankrupt has been actually imprisoned, while General Order XII relates to protection from an arrest not yet accomplished.

II. PROTECTION OF BANKRUPTS.

a. When right to protection begins and ends.—The right of protection conferred by subsection a is personal to the bankrupt. By § 1 (4), a person who files a petition or one against whom a petition is filed is from the moment of filing a bankrupt. The section provides for protection of the bankrupt only during the period covered by the pendency of the bankruptcy proceedings during which jurisdiction is conferred on the bankruptcy court to protect the bankrupt from arrest on a provable debt until a discharge has been granted or refused.⁷ The right is not available after he ceases to be a bankrupt, i. e., when he is discharged.⁸ The exemption from arrest when in attendance upon a court of bankruptcy, as construed by General Order XII, continues until final adjudication upon his application for a discharge. The bankrupt is entitled to the exemption, not merely on the particular occasions when he is actually in attendance in court but during the whole period during which he may attend or has duties to perform in reference to the estate.⁹ The period of protection, therefore, is not, as a rule, longer than eighteen months; but may be, as where a contest develops on the application for the discharge. It is conceivable, also, that a petitioner may prolong the time by delaying the adjudication. But the court can impose terms on granting orders of protection, and an effort to extend the time would be quickly checked.

b. On what it depends.—Protection, as a rule, is granted only to bankrupts. It has been held, however, that, under the common law, the right of protection extends to witnesses,¹⁰ and to parties, including creditors, while attending bankruptcy proceedings.¹¹ The protection given to such persons is, however, only that which is always allowed to those in attendance on a court, or in going and coming to the court, in response to its summons or mandate. The court may grant the protection on the terms that the bankrupt give security that he will obey all orders of the court and not depart from its jurisdiction.¹² Pending a petition to review an order denying a petition to revoke a discharge, the court may restrain the arrest of the bankrupt based upon a claim coming within clause a of this section.¹³ The term "arrest" as used in this section is not confined to the original taking into custody but applies to a continued detention. Thus he may be released after the adjudication where he was under arrest at the time thereof.¹⁴ The phrasing of General Order XXX seems to limit to voluntary bankrupts the right to protection from an arrest already made. Under the policy of the law, as indicated by § 1 (1), this right, however, is equally available to involuntary bankrupts.¹⁵

c. Kind of liability.—The bankrupt is entitled to protection from process from a State court where the debt or claim, for the enforcement of which the process is issued, would be released by the discharge in bankruptcy. Where the claim, though provable, is not dischargeable, the bankrupt is not protected from arrest.¹⁶ The dischargeability of debts is discussed in detail under section 17, post. How far the determination of a court of bankruptcy on the question whether the debt is dischargeable, should be followed by a State court, is for the latter court to decide. It may thus happen that, during the bankruptcy proceedings, a debtor will be protected, only to find the discharge of no avail when pleaded in habeas corpus in a State court on a subsequent arrest.¹⁷ Where the application is for the protection against arrest while in attendance or while performing some duty prescribed by the act, the dischargeability of the debt is not material.¹⁸

d. Practice.—When the application for protection is made before arrest, it often takes the form of a petition for a stay, on the theory that the order of arrest is a step in a suit; and, if so, it will be in accordance with the practice indicated under section 11.^{19a} Where, however, the bankrupt desires protection against arrest generally, the proper method is to apply for an order of protection. This order can be granted by the referee.¹⁹ It is a matter of right, but extends only to process resting on debts which are dischargeable, and should be in terms so limited. If the bankrupt has already been arrested and he applies for release on the ground that the debt is dischargeable, comity suggests an application in the first instance to a State court.²⁰ But such an application may be made to a Federal court.²¹ Where a bankrupt wilfully disobeys an order made in proceedings supplementary to execution, a subsequent order of the bankruptcy court, restraining his arrest upon civil process, does not prevent his commitment by a State court as punishment for disregard of its authority.²²

e. General Order XXX.—The practice is well outlined in General Order XXX.²³ Where the reason for the application is that the bankrupt may attend an examination or perform any other duty under the act, either method of affording protection is available, and the application should be made to the in bankruptcy so advanced that the bankrupt will not be harassed by the process in the hands of the sheriff, a temporary stay is granted, and the discharge allowed and the hearings in bankruptcy nearly concluded, the stay should be allowed for a definite period in order to permit the bankrupt to apply to the State court for the appropriate remedy to bring up the question of the effect of his discharge. Matter of Lockwood (D. referee. But, if any of the bankrupt's debts are not dischargeable, the order of protection should be limited in time and the body of the bankrupt returned to the jailer as soon as the examination is completed or the duty performed; unless the arrest post-dated the petition, when, it seems, he should be discharged from imprisonment.²⁴ No protection can be afforded by any other court to a debtor under arrest for contempt or disobedience of the lawful orders of a court of bankruptcy. Whether, on a contested application, the court will go behind the face of the papers, was a disputed question under the former act.²⁵ The better opinion seems to be that it will, i. e., that it is the character of the debt which is the subject of investigation and the court, being a paramount court, should hear all disputed facts. This view seems in accordance with the provisions of General Order XXX.

III. DETENTION OF BANKRUPTS.

a. Purpose of subsection.—It is apparent that the purpose of subsection b of this section is to provide a means to keep the bankrupt within the district, if the court is satisfied that he is about to leave it to avoid examination.²⁶ The law of 1867 contained no analogous clause²⁷ and his detention was not authorized save before adjudication in an involuntary case,²⁸ and then only as incident to a seizure of the bankrupt's property similar to that now authorized by §§ 3-e and 69-a. The warrant and its purpose were more like the writ of ne exeat, referred to in the next paragraph.²⁹ The present section is, however, for a very different purpose. That the bankrupt is about to depart, that he intends thereby to avoid examination, and that his departure will tend to defeat the proceedings in bankruptcy, must satisfactorily appear. Otherwise, a warrant under this subsection cannot be issued.

b. Practice.—The limitations here are important. Such an application can be made only between the time of filing the petition and the expiration of one month after the qualifications of the trustee; and the bankrupt, if taken into custody, can be detained only ten days. The affidavits of two persons are necessary; they must show facts, not opinions, and must be reasonably conclusive. The bankrupt cannot be actually imprisoned. Within these limitations and on a showing of the facts indicated in the last paragraph, the judge may, on petition or motion, issue a warrant. The bankrupt can, it seems, move for his release, or give bail. As soon as the ten days have elapsed, he must be released. There seems to be no prohibition on second or other like applications, but the court will not permit the use of this process to become persecution. The similarity between the detention here authorized and that made effective through the writ of ne exeat will be recognized.³⁰ The latter is, however, not limited to a detention for the purpose of examination. It has been held that a court of bankruptcy may, under the broad powers

EXTRADITION OF BANKRUPTS.

§ 10. Extradition of Bankrupts.—a Whenever a warrant for the apprehension of a bankrupt shall have been issued, and he shall have been found within the jurisdiction of a court other than the one issuing the warrant, he may be extradited in the same manner in which persons under indictment are now extradited from one district within which a district court has jurisdiction to another.

a. When a bankrupt may be extradited, 283.

b. Practice, 284.

I. EXTRADITION OF BANKRUPTS.

a. When a bankrupt may be extradited.—This section is new to the present bankruptcy act. Extradition proceedings can be instituted under this section only when a warrant for the apprehension of a bankrupt has been issued, as when he has committed one of the offenses mentioned in § 29-b, or has been adjudged in contempt under § 2 (13) (15), or § 41-a. The court has no jurisdiction to issue a warrant of arrest as a basis for extradition proceedings to bring the bankrupt before the court for examination after he has departed from the district and settled in another jurisdiction.¹ He must also be found in the district whence extradition is sought. This implies positive identification. Further than this, however, the court need not go. The mere production of the warrant, authenticated either in writing or orally, appears to be sufficient. In this, extradition in bankruptcy seems to differ from extradition for crime.²

2. Compare In re Dana, 68 Fed. 886; Cal- 47 C. C. A. 177, 108 Fed. 35.

b. Practice.—By the terms of this section, the practice on extradition in bankruptcy is assimilated to that provided by § 1014 of the Revised Statutes.³ The bankrupt is brought in on a warrant issued by a commissioner on complaint under oath; he may deny identity, or that the warrant was issued, or, if issued, that it was for his apprehension. The commissioner must either discharge him or commit him to custody. If the latter, he may be admitted to bail. If no bail is offered, he must be taken before the judge, who, after inquiry into the facts, may either release him or grant an order or warrant for removal. And the marshal will then deliver him into the custody of the court which issued the original warrant of arrest.⁴

For any crime or offense against the United States, the offender may, by any justice or judge of the United States, or by any commissioner of a circuit court to take bail, or by any chancellor, judge of a supreme or superior court, chief or first judge of common pleas, mayor of a city, justice of the peace, or other magistrate, of any State where he may be found, and agreeably to the usual mode of process against offenders in such State, and at the expense of the United States, be arrested and imprisoned, or bailed, as the case may be, for trial before such court of the United States as by law has cognizance of the offense. Copies of the process shall be returned as speedily as may be into the clerk's office of such court, together with the recognizances of the witnesses for their appearance to testify in the case. And where any offender or witness is committed in any district other than that where the offense is to be tried, it shall be the duty of the judge of the district where such offender or witness is imprisoned, seasonably to issue, and of the marshal to execute, a warrant for his removal to the district where the trial is to be had."

SUITS BY AND AGAINST BANKRUPTS.

§ 11. Suits By and Against Bankrupts.—a A suit which is founded upon a claim from which a discharge would be a release, and which is pending against a person at the time of the filing of a petition against him, shall be stayed until after an adjudication or the dismissal of the petition; if such person is adjudged a bankrupt, such action may be further stayed until twelve months after the date of such adjudication, or, if within that time such person applies for a discharge, then until the question of such discharge is determined.

b The court may order the trustee to enter his appearance and defend any pending suit against the bankrupt.

c A trustee may, with the approval of the court, be permitted to prosecute as trustee any suit commenced by the bankrupt prior to the adjudication, with like force and effect as though it had been commenced by him.

d Suits shall not be brought by or against a trustee of a bankrupt estate subsequent to two years after the estate has been closed.

I. COMPARATIVE LEGISLATION.

a. Stay under previous acts.—The power to stay suits concerning the person or property of the bankrupt is essential to the orderly administration of a bankruptcy law. This principle has always been recognized in England; and, while it is not yet authoritatively settled, it seems that there even an inferior county court, sitting in bankruptcy, may stay a suit on a debt in a superior, i. e., the high court.¹ The English statute also deprives a creditor whose debt is provable in bankruptcy of all remedies against the bankrupt, including the right to sue, during the pendency of the proceedings, save with the consent of the court.² In Canada the bankruptcy court has power, after presentation of a bankruptcy petition, to stay actions or other proceedings against the debtor. After the adjudication such actions or proceedings are automatically stayed.^{3a} In this country, for obvious reasons, stays of proceedings in State courts have been regarded with some alarm, and, as a rule, only those authorized by "any law relating to proceedings in bankruptcy" are permitted.³ The act of 1841 contained no clause like that now under discussion, but, under it, the assignee was empowered to prosecute or defend all pending suits, and the filing of a claim was deemed a waiver of all other remedies. Not so the law of 1867, which, by a specific grant of power to order stays, supplemented § 720 of the Revised Statutes and rendered the jurisdiction to enjoin both affirmative the virile. There is, however, a marked difference between the provisions of that and the present law.

b. Differences between previous acts and the present law.—These differences may be summarized thus: Stays under the former law were mandatory, if against a suit on a provable debt brought either before or during the pendency of the proceeding, and lasted until the time of discharge, unless there was unreasonable delay in obtaining it; provided, however, that the court might permit the suit to go as far as judgment, thus to measure up the amount of the debt. Stays of suits under the present law are, strictly speaking, confined to actions pending at the time of the bankruptcy. They are mandatory if before the adjudication, and discretionary after it.^{3a} They cannot be granted against suits founded on provable debts that are not dischargeable, and if granted, they put an end to all further proceedings, and if granted after the adjudication, continue in force to the determination of the bankrupt's right to a discharge. The stay of suits against the bankrupt pending the bankruptcy proceedings, is absolutely necessary to give effect to the present bankruptcy act.⁴

II. STAYS OF SUITS BEGUN AFTER FILING OF PETITION.

a. Purpose of stays of suits.—If, as has been said, a chief purpose of such stays is to prevent the harassment of the bankrupt by suits, pending a discharge which will be a bar, it would seem that a court of bankruptcy could, in its discretion, restrain a suit begun after the filing of the petition.⁵ There was no doubt about this under the law of 1867, as the creditor who proved elected his remedy, and the creditor who did not could not prosecute his suit to judgment.⁶ The omission is perhaps significant. Yet, while a suit began on a provable debt after the bankruptcy would seem but a shot into the air and likely to amount to naught save a liquidation of the debt,⁷ the rule that a court of bankruptcy will stay an after-brought suit only when and because

3. Judicial Code, § 206 (formerly R. S., § 720). directed against possession of the bankrupt's property,⁸ by no means affects the broad doctrine here urged. Nor does the converse rule, that the court will not generally stay such a suit brought for the purpose of asserting a valid lien which attached before the beginning of the proceeding.⁹

b. When stay of after-brought suits will be granted.—It is not necessary to rely wholly on the terms of § 2 (15) for power to enjoin. The stay can be directed to the plaintiff, who, being doubtless a scheduled creditor, is a party to the proceeding; or, under § 2 (6), such a plaintiff can be brought in, and then stayed.¹⁰ Either procedure is well within the principle that, to protect its jurisdiction, a court will enjoin all parties from proceedings looking to the same remedy in another court of concurrent jurisdiction.¹¹ It seems to be the clear intent of the bankruptcy act that the administration of a bankrupt estate by the bankruptcy court shall not be unduly interfered with.¹² Therefore where the result of a suit in a State court, brought after the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings, will be to deprive the bankruptcy court of jurisdiction over claims of the plaintiff against the bankrupt estate, an injunction order staying further proceedings in such suit is proper.¹³ An action in replevin,¹⁴ or to recover for the technical conversion of goods consigned to the bankrupt for sale,¹⁵ or to foreclose a mortgage given by the bankrupt over four months before bankruptcy,¹⁶ or an action to remove an alleged bankrupt from leased premises commenced after institution of the bankruptcy proceedings, may be restrained.¹⁷ So, an action by a chattel mort-

Interference with administration. Where a purchaser of goods, prior to the finding of an involuntary petition in bankruptcy against it, makes an assignment for the benefit of creditors, and after the filing of the petition but before adjudication the vendor instituted an action of replevin against the assignee, claiming that the goods had been obtained by fraud, the trustee is entitled to an order restraining the vendor from prosecuting his suit. Matter of Well-made Gas Mantle Co. (C. Restraining interference with tenant.—In the case of In re Metz, Fed. Cas. 9,509, an injunction was granted restraining interference with the property of the bankrupt before adjudication in an involuntary proceeding and restraining the landlord from dispossessing him. The injunction order was made after the proceedings to dispossess the gagee to recover damages for the alleged wrongful taking of the mortgaged property from his possession, may be stayed.¹⁸ But a proceeding under a writ of forcible detainer may not be restrained.¹⁹

II. STAYS OF SUITS AGAINST BANKRUPT.

a. Depending on dischargeability of debt.—The section under consideration provides for the stay of a suit which is founded upon a claim from which a discharge would be a release. This dischargeability of the debt is made the basis of jurisdiction. There can be no stay under this section unless the suit is founded upon a claim from which a discharge would be a release.²⁰ The difference between the present § 11 and § 21 of the old law in this regard has already been noted.²¹ The words, "from which a discharge would be a release," are construed broadly, and suits not strictly within them are sometimes stayed.²² The word "suits" is also given a wide meaning. It includes actions at law, suits in equity, and, in fact, any legal proceedings where the personal liability of the debtor is sought to be fixed.²³ It includes a proceeding under a city ordinance to collect a debt which is made a charge upon the compensation due the bankrupt from the city.²⁴ It embraces legal steps debtors were instituted. Judge Batchford said: "The occupation of the premises by the marshal was the occupation of them by the court. A landlord who lets premises to a tenant to be occupied for the purposes of trade must be held to do so with the full understanding that the tenant may be proceeded against in bankruptcy, and that the bankrupt court may be called in to take possession of the goods of the tenant on the premises. In many cases it would be impossible to remove the goods, before a sale of them, without great loss and injury."

18. Stay of action by mortgagee.—Where the day after a chattel mortgagor was adjudged a bankrupt, the mortgagee took possession of the mortgaged property and brought an action against the receiver in bankruptcy to recover damages for the alleged wrongful taking of the property from his possession, his action was stayed by the bankruptcy court and the judge in the course of his opinion said: "Ordinarily, where a receiver of the court has merely general directions to take into his possession the property of the bankrupt, and there is a claim that he has taken the property of a third person, the court, in conformity with general principles, would leave him to answer in any proper forum for his individual acts, . . . but where it appears without dispute, as it does here, that the third party cannot possibly have any legal rights to be established by the litigation in the State court, and the result of permitting it to be continued would not only suffer an injustice to the receiver but indirectly tend to embarrass this court in administering the estate, the equitable powers of the court should be exercised both for the prevention of the injustice and to protect the court's full jurisdiction." In re Gutman & Wenk (D. C., N. Y.), 8 Am. B. R. 252, 114 Fed. 1009.

after judgment, such as supplementary proceedings,²⁵ levy of execution,²⁶ judicial and sheriff's sales,²⁷ even the distribution of the proceeds of such sales,²⁸ though, were it not for other sections of the law, it may be doubted whether the word could be extended so far.²⁹ The fact that the creditor who is bringing the action has been omitted from the list of creditors on the bankrupt's schedule, does not necessarily prevent his action from being stayed, for his claim is still released by discharge, if he has notice of the bankrupt proceedings.³⁰ It is immaterial upon the question of jurisdiction of the court to grant a stay, whether the determination as to the dischargeability of the debt is sound or unsound; until reversed it is binding and conclusive upon the parties.³¹ In determining whether the claim upon which the suit is based is a dischargeable debt, the court may be guided by the pleadings.³² The court, on motion to stay proceedings on a claim against a bankrupt pending his application for a discharge, passes upon the character of the claim to be stayed, but if the claim is evidenced by a judgment, it will not, in passing upon that question, go behind the judgment as shown by the record of the action in which the judgment resulted.^{32a} The privilege of a stay conferred by this section is to be accorded in both voluntary and involuntary bankruptcy.³³

In re Burke (D. C., N. Y.), 19 Am. B. R. 51, 165 Fed. 703.

The effect of an injunction issued by a court of bankruptcy, enjoining a judgment creditor of a bankrupt and his attorneys, and his and their servants and agents from taking any further proceedings in an action in a State court is to restrain the creditor and his attorneys from taking proceedings in a State court to punish the bankrupt for an alleged contempt committed before the adjudication in bankruptcy. In re Fortunato (D. C., N. Y.), 9 Am. B. R. 630, 123 Fed. 622. As to the latter no stay should be allowed. In re De Long (Ref., N. Y.), 1 Am. B. R. 66.

After an estate in bankruptcy has been administered and the bankrupt discharged, the bankruptcy court will not grant an order restraining further action in supplementary proceedings in the State court or determine whether the State court judgment sought to be enforced has been released by the bankrupt's discharge. Stay where previous voluntary petition was within six years.—A bankrupt, who has been discharged upon his voluntary petition within six years, is not entitled to have a suit by a creditor in the State court stayed until application for discharge is presented and acted upon by the court in his present voluntary proceeding. This because none of the debts existing against the bankrupt at the time of his second adjudication can be discharged, and, further because the assets in the custody of the bankruptcy court will in no wise be affected by the suit in the State court. Review of discretion.—Where the only effect of the staying order upon the proceedings in the State court will be to prevent examination of the bankrupt in supplementary proceedings for the purpose of obtaining information which might be useful in the prosecution of a creditor's bill in equity, and where such information can be easily obtained in the District Court, there is no occasion to review the exercise of its discretion. In re Lesser (C. Suits to recover; income from trust funds.—An order of the District Court, entered upon the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings, staying the prosecution of suits by creditors under section 98 of the New York Real Property Law to reach the surplus of income due the bankrupt from trust funds, may be vacated and similar suits prosecuted to judgment with the assent of the trustee. The District Court might, however, have allowed the original suits to be prosecuted to judgment so as to liquidate the claims of the creditors. Matter of Buchanan (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 33 Am. B. permit them to prosecute their claims, although actions to enforce such claims were commenced subsequent to the proceedings in bankruptcy against the corporation.⁴² The stay should usually be granted (1) if the bankrupt is threatened with arrest or will be needlessly harassed;⁴³ (2) if the suit is not in judgment; and even after judgment, if the rights of the general creditors, not parties to the suit, will be jeopardized by further proceedings in the State courts;⁴⁴ or (3) if the judgment is founded on a transaction which is an act of bankruptcy, or a fraud upon the creditors or upon the law.⁴⁵

c. Power to stay should be exercised with caution.—It follows on the very nature of the power to stay that it should be exercised with caution. The right to enjoin has often been too broadly expressed.⁴⁶ There is nothing in the bankruptcy act, per se, which either requires or justifies the issuance of a writ of injunction under any circumstances less formidable than would be required to justify its issuance in any other equitable proceeding. It will be issued, and its use is intended, to prevent the infliction of threatened or imminent, and not mere possible injury.⁴⁷ Many of the cases are wayward guides. At the same time, it is impossible to phrase any exact rule. The present tendency is toward limitations on the power, rather than its opposite.⁴⁸

d. Effect of proof of debt on right of action.—This was much debated under the former law, which in terms provided that he who proved his debt in bankruptcy waived his right to enforce it by any other legal remedy. But the

The discharge of a corporation does not prevent creditors from taking judgment in a State court against the corporation in such limited form as may enable them to reap the benefit of the stockholders' or directors' liability. The judgment rendered will not be against the person or property of the bankrupt, and has no further effect than to enable the plaintiff to charge the directors or stockholders in accordance with the State statute. Enjoining sale of corporate property in equity suit.—Where a large majority of the creditors of the corporation desire a sale of its property, under an order of the court which appointed the receiver, and no rights of minority creditors who did not intervene in the equity action will be in any way affected, the bankruptcy court, upon the filing of a bankruptcy petition by them against the corporation, will not restrain such sale of its property. The prosecution of a suit instituted by the stockholders of a bankrupt corporation, prior to bankruptcy, against a bankrupt corporation should not be stayed, where it appears that the receivers appointed in such suit have turned over to bankrupt's trustees all its assets, with the exception of certain choses in action against two of the bankrupt's directors against whom a suit by such receivers is pending, and there is a legitimate scope for the judgment of the State court, which might be limited so as not to interfere with the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court. 47. Mere possibility of action.—A bankruptcy court, upon the filing of an involuntary petition in bankruptcy, should not, as of course, and without any allegation or proof of a threatened invasion of the rights of any creditor, issue an injunction enjoining the further prosecution of a suit in a State court for a provable debt against the bankrupt, because of the mere possibility of action being taken which will be injurious to the rights of creditors, and in the absence of application to the State court for relief. better opinion was that the waiver endured only until a discharge was granted or refused. The amendatory act of 1874 made this view also the written law. That the same is the law to-day,⁴⁹ with the exception that a suit may probably be begun and, unless stayed, prosecuted to judgment, is undoubtedly true. So also is the old time rule that the remedy thus suspended comes into being the moment the discharge is granted or denied.⁵⁰ But the State court does not lose jurisdiction.⁵¹ The stay is directed to the suitor, not the court, and the latter may go on if the cause is moved by the person enjoined, and a judgment resulting will be valid.⁵² The remedy of a party thus aggrieved is in contempt proceedings. It is important, however, to note that, if a stay is not granted and the suit proceeds and judgment is entered after the discharge, the latter cannot be set up as a release to the judgment.⁵³ A stay of a suit pending in the State courts effected by an injunction issued by a court in bankruptcy is not a dismissal of the suit. It does not defeat the cause of action pending in the State court; it merely suspends the proceedings as long as the injunction is in force.⁵⁴

IV. SUITS OR PROCEEDINGS IN WHICH STAY MAY BE GRANTED.

a. Suits or proceedings in rem.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The general rule is that the court that has acquired jurisdiction of the res will retain it. If the property has come into the possession of the bankruptcy court any suit or proceeding tending to interfere with such possession may properly be stayed. Thus, a Federal court will restrain a replevin creditor proceeding in a State court against property in the custody of the Federal Court.⁵⁵ If the property sued for was not claimed by the bankrupt, nor included in his schedule, the bankruptcy court has no jurisdiction to stay a suit brought in a state court to recover the property from one who claimed to have purchased it from the trustee.⁵⁶

(2) PROPERTY IN POSSESSION OF STATE COURTS.—The court will refuse a stay in most cases where the State court is in possession,⁵⁷ or where the bankruptcy had no legal or equitable title to the property sought to be replevined.⁵⁸

Stay of suit in State court dissolved by discharge.—Where the district court stayed a suit in another State for the purpose of enabling the bankrupt to plead his discharge when he had obtained it, it becomes the duty of the court upon the granting of such discharge to the bankrupt to vacate its previous stay and remit both parties to their rights, remedies and defenses under the law. In re Rosenthal (D. But the rule yields, however, where the possession of the State court is (1) the result of a fraud on the law, or (2) of a lien declared void or voidable under the law. But if the lien is by a judgment creditor's suit begun more than four months before the bankruptcy, a stay will not be granted.⁵⁹

(3) PROCEEDINGS OF LONG STANDING.—A distinction is drawn as to the power of a bankruptcy court to enjoin proceedings of long standing in a State court, in which such court has acquired complete jurisdiction of the person and property of the bankrupt before the bankruptcy proceedings were commenced and the power to enjoin proceedings instituted within four months of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy. In the latter case the power is properly exercised.⁶⁰ Where a proceeding was commenced long prior to the proceedings in bankruptcy, and the property in controversy was under the control and in the possession of a receiver appointed by the State court, a bankruptcy court cannot enjoin the proceedings or order the property turned over to the trustee in bankruptcy.⁶¹

(4) PROCEEDING TO ENFORCE A LIEN.—Where, within the four months, period, an action to enforce a lien is brought in a State court against a bankrupt, and his entire property is involved in the litigation, the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to stay further proceedings in the action.⁶² But it has been held that where before filing a petition against an involuntary bankrupt, a creditor brings an attachment suit in a State court to enforce an asserted right in rem the bankruptcy court is without jurisdiction to stay such suit after the State court has acquired jurisdiction of the res.⁶³ Stays of proceedings

Enjoining prosecution of attachment suit.—Within four months prior to the defendant's bankruptcy, petitioner commenced an action in a State court upon a claim provable in bankruptcy. A warrant of attachment was issued in such action and the attachment made was discharged by a surety company's bond. One of the bankrupt's directors entered into an agreement with the surety company and to secure him against loss, bankrupt conveyed certain real estate to be held in trust for him.

Proceeds of sale in possession of State court.—Where, prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, lienors of the bankrupt commenced an action to foreclose their liens under the State statute, and the property was sold and the money paid into court after the petition was filed, and the State judge, prior to the issuance of a restraining order, had rendered his decision in favor of the lienors but had not signed the decree it was held that the entry of the formal judgment was a purely ministerial act and that a motion to dissolve the restraining order should be granted as no good purpose could be served by transferring the money from the State court to the bankruptcy court. Matter of Bach (D. to enforce liens are usually sought to prevent either (1) the enforcement of an execution or an attachment levied within the four months' period or (2) the foreclosure of a valid mortgage. In the former, there seems little doubt about the power to halt the lien creditor or of the wisdom of exercising it.⁶⁴ In the case of a mortgage foreclosure, while the power exists, the mortgaged premises being in the custody of the court,⁶⁵ yet, provided the mortgage is valid, it will not as a rule be exercised, and certainly not unless it appears that the equity of redemption vested in the trustee is of some value.⁶⁶ But while the court will not usually enjoin the foreclosure of such mortgages it may direct the trustee to intervene in the action for the purpose of protecting all of the creditors of the bankrupt.⁶⁷ The decisions under the former class of cases are fairly uniform,⁶⁸ and where there is a difference, now that the doctrine of Bardes v. Bank has been eliminated, turn, as a rule, on whether the action sought to be stayed is based upon a transaction which is void or voidable under the present law. Those under the latter class declaring against the exercise of jurisdiction to stay the foreclosure of a valid mortgage, and remitting the party who seeks the stay to the State court, are equally

A., 8th Cir.), 21 Am. B. R. 683, 167 Fed. 529, it was held that where a court of bankruptcy is in actual possession of real property belonging to the bankrupt, it has jurisdiction to determine the amount and order of priority of liens thereon and to liquidate such liens, and in aid of its jurisdiction may, by injunction, restrain the prosecution of actions brought in a State court before the institution of the bankruptcy proceedings but within the four months' period, to foreclose liens upon the property which are concededly valid.

uniform,⁶⁹ and the earlier cases contra⁷⁰ are no longer controlling. Nor was this latter result appreciably affected by Bardes v. Bank.⁷¹ However, in extreme cases, such as was In re Sabine, and in cases where the mortgage itself is voidable under the terms of the law, the right to stay will usually be exercised.⁷² A stay of a sale of real property seized under a judgment rendered in an action to foreclose a mortgage prior to the four months before the filing of the petition should not be granted,⁷³ unless it is absolutely necessary, under the facts of the particular case, in order to protect the rights of the creditors or the trustee which would otherwise be lost or impaired.⁷⁴ Where the lien creditor voluntarily makes himself a party to the proceedings,⁷⁵ as when he appears at the first meeting and asks that his security be ascertained for the purpose of voting on that part of his debt which may be unsecured, the rule is, of course, different. Such a creditor may later be stayed. But not, if the suit is a creditor's bill of long standing.⁷⁶ It will be noticed that § 11-a a suit only may be stayed which rests upon a claim from which a discharge would be a release. It should be further noticed that the suit does not in any way affect a lien upon the bankrupt's property; it does not affect any suit maintained by a secured creditor to enforce a lien thereon. In recognition of this principle, a suit to enforce a mechanics' lien against real property of the bankrupt will not be stayed⁷⁷ and such a suit may be brought against the trustee without leave of the court.⁷⁸ Where distress has been made by a landlord and afterward the property has been transferred to another person who becomes a bankrupt, the result is to place the property under the control of the bankruptcy court, and such court may restrain further proceedings under the distress.⁷⁹ While courts of bankruptcy may, in the exercise of the discretion

Stay permitted if necessary for administration.—Even in cases where State courts have obtained possession of the property of the bankrupt by the foreclosure of valid liens or by receivership proceedings prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court is paramount, and such proceedings in State courts may be stayed if necessary to the proper administration of the estate of the bankrupt. *Cohen v. conferred by this section, stay proceedings where the property is in possession of an officer of a State court under a levy, yet such stay should not be granted unless the bankrupt's estate will be benefited thereby; if the property subject to the lien is insufficient to satisfy it, there will be no advantage to the general creditors from administration in bankruptcy, and the State court should be permitted to remain in possession.⁸⁰

b. Stay of proceedings under general assignments.—Prior to Bardes v. Bank, the cases were uniform in holding that, a general assignment being an act of bankruptcy and a constructive fraud on the law, the general assignee might be halted by an injunction from the court of bankruptcy.⁸¹ Whatever doubt resulted from that case was eliminated by the same court's decision in Bryan v. Bernheimer.⁸² Nor was the doubt restored by that court's decision in Louisville Trust Co. v. Comminger,⁸³ a case which applied the Bardes rule only to the assignee and his attorneys and that, too, only when they had become vested with an adverse title prior to the bankruptcy. Since the amendatory act of 1903, Bardes v. Bank being no longer the law, the question is stripped of all dogmatic limitations. There can now be no doubt about the power of a court of bankruptcy to restrain general assignment proceedings; indeed, it becomes its duty proprio motu, at once a petition, especially an involuntary petition, is filed.⁸⁴

c. Suits or proceedings in personam.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Much of what has already been said may be applied here. Two classes of suits and proceedings are peculiarly against the person,—(1) ordinary suits for the collection of simple debts, and (2) proceedings which may result in the attachment and detention of the body of the debtor. Stated broadly, the former, subject to limitations already discussed, especially where the debt proceeded on is the result of a fraudulent preference,⁸⁵ will always be stayed. On the other hand, the latter class of cases will rarely be stayed, for the reason that, as a rule, arrest on civil process rests on obligations which are not dischargeable in bankruptcy.⁸⁶ To this generalization there are, of course, exceptions, as where Restraining landlord from interference with trustee.—Where, at adjudication, a tenant holds an unexpired lease of the store occupied by him, his trustee is entitled to a reasonable time within which to dispose of a valuable stock of goods which is not removable without serious loss to the estate, and the landlord to whom the trustee has given a bond against loss will be restrained by injunction from interfering with the trustee's possession of the premises. In re Schwartzman (D. Effect of insolvency proceedings pending in State court.—The jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court is essentially exclusive in administering the affairs of insolvent individuals and corporations; and such court, when properly applied to, cannot refuse to take jurisdiction because a proceeding to the same end is pending in a State court, but may stay all action in the State court in such proceeding. In re Benwood Brewing Co. (D. the remedy on a simple contract debt given by the State law includes arrest;⁸⁷ or the well-known Kentucky alimony case, where a stay was granted on a State court's enforcement of its mandate by contempt.⁸⁸

(2) WHEN SUCH STAYS WILL BE GRANTED.—Cases already cited under previous paragraphs indicate the conditions under which suits and proceedings in personam will be stayed. A stay should be granted where the proceedings may result in the arrest or imprisonment of the bankrupt.⁸⁹ Where the order sought to be restrained pertains to some act of the bankrupt consisting of an offense against the dignity of the State court, it should not be stayed,⁹⁰ nor should a stay be granted to prevent the punishment of the bankrupt for disobedience of a lawful order of a State court prior to filing a petition in bankruptcy.⁹¹ But where an attempt is made to enforce a dischargeable claim in a State court by proceedings to punish the bankrupt for contempt, the bankruptcy court may, in its discretion, restrain such proceedings,⁹² and it is immaterial whether the court's view of the probability of the claim is sound or unsound, as an erroneous decision does not make void the decision of the court in this respect.⁹³ An injunction restraining further proceedings in an action in a State court operates in restraint of proceedings in such court to punish the bankrupt for an alleged contempt committed before the adjudication in bankruptcy.⁹⁴

V. PRACTICE AND PLEADINGS.

a. Application to State court.—Subdivision a of this section is general in its effect; the jurisdiction thereby conferred on the courts of bankruptcy is not exclusive. Application may be made to a State court, and the mandatory provisions of the section are as binding on that court as on the Federal Court.⁹⁵ Where the suit is pending in a State court the application should ordinarily be made in that court in the first instance.⁹⁶ In that event, the practice will be that provided by the State law. petition or of the adjudication will be enough to establish the fact that such a proceeding has been begun. But it is in no sense the duty of the State court to stay merely because it hears of the bankruptcy of a suitor. It must be informed of the facts by proper pleadings.⁹⁷ The mere fact that a petition in bankruptcy has been filed does not operate ipso facto to relieve the bankrupt from complying with the orders of a State court.⁹⁸

b. Application to bankruptcy court.—The bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to stay proceedings in an action against the bankrupt upon motion of a creditor whose application in the State court for such relief has been denied.⁹⁹ If the application is made to the court of bankruptcy, it should be made to the judge. General Order XII (3) effectually limits the power of a referee to grant "an injunction to stay proceedings of a court or officer of the United States, or of a State," and requires an application therefor to be heard and decided by the judge.¹⁰⁰ The weight of authority is now apparently in favor of the doctrine that referees may not enjoin proceedings in a State court,¹⁰¹ although they may grant restraining orders and injunctions in other cases.¹⁰² Where the courts of bankruptcy have by their rules restricted the power of referees to the grant-made in pursuance of the Constitution, binds the courts of each State as well as those of the nation. Upon the application of the bankrupt to the court, State or national, in which the suit is pending, it is the duty of that court to stay the proceedings."

98. Right of bankrupt to refuse to obey orders of State court.—The filing of a petition in bankruptcy and an adjudication does not operate as a stay of supplementary proceedings in a State court and hence where a bankrupt fails to appear at the time set for his examination he may be punished for contempt. Norton v. Bielby (Co. Ct., N. Y.), 86 N. Y. Misc. 644, 33 Am. B. R. 295, 149 N. Y. Supp. 592.

100. Application to referee.—In a former edition of this work, it has been said: "If the application is made to the court of bankruptcy it should be made to the judge if there has yet been no order of reference; otherwise to the referee in charge, under the former law, the register's functions were more clerical than judicial and he had no such power. It has been thought that General Order XII(3) is a limitation on the power to enjoin implied from § 38-a(4); but the latter authorizes courts of bankruptcy and not the Supreme Court, to abridge this power. Further, cases contra must be considered at least impliedly overruled by Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 7 Am. B. R. 224, 46 L. Ed. 405, the power to issue an order to show cause why property should not be restored being an analogous exercise of jurisdiction, and of a higher class than a mere stay." It is submitted that this is a reasonable exposition of the law on the question. A number of referees have contended that they had jurisdiction in such cases. In re White (Ref., Ala.), 10 Am. B. R. 790, 799; In re Sabine (Ref., N. Y.), 1 Am. B. R. 315; In re Northup (Ref., N. Y.), 1 Am. B. R. 427. But the weight of authority seems to be opposed to this contention and we have reluctantly departed from the rule laid down in the former text, with the belief, however, that the question is not yet settled.

Right of referee to enjoin proceedings in State court.—Judge Lowell discussed the subject to some extent in Re Steuer (D. C., Mass.), 5 Am. B. R. 214, 104 Fed. 976, but declined to decide the point. He says there, however, that: "It is strongly implied that the referee has some jurisdiction to issue injunctions to any party not an officer of the United States or of a State, unless the injunction stays the proceedings of the court." This opinion is approved in Re Berkowitz (D. C., Pa.), 16 Am. B. R. 251, 255, 143 Fed. 598, holding that a referee may exercise the power of the judge except in certain specified cases, one of the exceptions being that he may restrain a court or officer of the United States or a State, unless there be a pressing necessity to act, to which a certificate of the clerk is the essential prerequisite.

ing of temporary restraining orders only,¹⁰⁸ care should be taken to ask no more than the referee can grant. If the parties, upon an application for a stay, submit the question to a referee, they are bound; even if the right of a referee to award an injunction to stay suits and proceedings cannot be regarded as finally settled.¹⁰⁴

c. Papers and procedure.—Save in the interval between the filing of the petition and the adjudication, a stay is always discretionary. Suits, except those asserting remedies incident to valid liens, should, as a rule, be stayed. Unless there has been an abuse of discretion, the stay will not be interfered with on appeal.¹⁰⁵ Application is usually made by a petition setting out the jurisdictional facts, such as the name of the suit, in what court, for what it is brought, the names of the persons sought to be enjoined, of their attorneys of record, and the like, and, if on information and belief, accompanied by sustaining affidavits.¹⁰⁶ The petition for a stay should sufficiently show that the proceeding is pending in a district in which it is made.¹⁰⁷ It may be verified by the attorney where it is shown that the moving parties live at a distance and that the application is made by their attorney in their behalf and for their benefit, and states why it is so made.¹⁰⁸ The reasons why the stay should be granted must clearly appear. If there be a trustee, he should apply, though if he refuses or neglects so to do, or if a trustee be not yet appointed, any party in interest, including the bankrupt, may do so. Before adjudication, the petitioning creditors are the proper persons, but any party interested in the proceeding may also apply. The stay is granted ex parte, in the same manner as other Federal writs. If it be a stay proper, as distinguished from a mere temporary injunction coupled with an order to show cause, the granting of it may

103. Rules restricting powers of referees.—“When a motion for an injunction is pending or is about to be made the referee may, in order to prevent injury to the property of the bankrupt, or otherwise, grant a temporary restraining order staying proceedings until the hearing and decision of said motion. In case all parties in interest agree that said motion be heard by the referee in charge, they may file with the referee a written stipulation to that effect. The decision of the referee on such motion shall be filed with the clerk, and if the referee decides that an injunction shall issue, an order to that effect may be made by the judge.” (Rule XXI, Northern and Rule XXIII, Western District of New York.)

Under the rules of the district court of New Jersey a referee has no power to issue an injunction. Lanning, District Judge, in discussing this question said: “If, by consent of the parties in a case, he acquires jurisdiction to hear a motion for injunction, he may hear it, and advise the judge of his decision by filing it with the clerk of the court. The judge of the court, and he only, may then, if the decision of the referee be that an injunction should issue, make an order for injunction. The referee may also, without consent of the parties, in order to prevent injury to the property of the bankrupt, grant a temporary stay of judicial proceedings; but such stay should be but for a few days, and only until the applicant can have an opportunity to move for an injunction before the judge. Such has been the general practice in the district of New Jersey.” In re Siebert (D. C., N. J.), 13 Am. B. R. 348, 133 Fed. 781.

be indorsed on the petition by the judge or the referee, and the clerk must then issue a writ of injunction, which, in turn, must be served by the marshal, in the same manner as other Federal writs. If a temporary restraining order, the practice of the State courts usually controls as to recitals, the signature of the judge or referee, and the method of service.¹⁰⁹ Omnibus stays are not frequent and the writ or order will, as a rule, be addressed to the party stayed eo nomine; however, stays directed generally "to all other persons" seem to bind all persons served.¹¹⁰ Whether, if the person to be stayed is not a party to the proceeding, he must be brought in by a subpoena served at the same time, is a question. There is high authority for the practice,¹¹¹ even under the present law; but the wording of the subsection under discussion does not seem to make it necessary. In actual practice, it is rarely essential and much less rarely done. How far courts will investigate the merits of contested applications depends largely on the conscience and industry of the judge or referee. The better authority seems to be that a court of bankruptcy will, if necessary, determine such merits, even swearing witnesses or ordering a referee to ascertain the facts. It will, indeed must, determine whether the debt is dischargeable or not.¹¹² To do this it must often declare the legal effect of pleadings in the State court, and sometimes of a judgment there granted.¹¹³ The petition, if presented to a referee, should be filed in the office of the clerk of the district court.¹¹⁴

VI. DURATION, MODIFICATION AND VACATION OF STAY.

Motions to modify or vacate an order staying proceedings in a State court are made in the usual way, on notice and affidavits, and are often subject to district rules or the practice of the local State courts. If the application for a stay is made prior to adjudication the stay is granted until after an adjudication or the dismissal of the petition. When granted before adjudication it is dissolved by the adjudication, although it may subsequently be renewed. If granted after the adjudication the stay may be continued until "twelve months after the date of such adjudication," but, if within that time such person applies for a discharge, then until the question of such discharge is determined.¹¹⁵ If the year goes by and the bankrupt obtains the extension permitted by § 14-a, it is questionable whether another stay could be granted under the terms of this section of the law; but it probably could under the general equity powers of the court, already discussed under § 2 (15). It is thought, however, that the words "the question of such discharge is determined" are sufficient to embrace the time consumed on an appeal, seasonably taken and diligently prosecuted. Once the discharge is granted or refused, the stay is dissolved. No order to that effect is required. Better practice, however, suggests the application for and entry of such an order, though it is the duty of the court

^{115.} Stay of proceedings pending discharge.—Pending the bankruptcy proceedings and before discharge, the bankrupt may plead to any suit pending at the time of his adjudication, or subsequently brought, a suggestion of the bankruptcy proceedings, and ask a stay in the State court until the question of his discharge has been finally determined in the bankruptcy to make such entry, in any event.¹¹⁶ If a bankrupt fails to apply for his discharge within the statutory period, or if the same when applied for is denied, an order restraining the enforcement of a judgment expires by its own limitation.¹¹⁷ Where an action against a bankrupt was stayed by the bankruptcy court where the question of the bankrupt's discharge was pending, a motion to continue the stay after his discharge is granted should be denied.¹¹⁸ But whether or not the discharge, if granted, will release a judgment in respect to which a stay of execution has been granted, may not be determined on a motion to vacate such stay.¹¹⁹ On a motion to vacate an order staying the enforcement of a judgment on the ground that it is for a non-dischargeable debt the burden is on the judgment creditor to show that the judgment is within the exception of the act and not dischargeable.¹²⁰

a. Where bankrupt is defendant.¹²¹—Subdivision b of this section provides that "The court may order the trustee to enter his appearance and defend any pending suit against the bankrupt." The words here used are not the same as those of the former law,¹²² but their effect is similar.¹²³ The trustee should exercise his own judgment with reference to defending a suit pending against the bankrupt at the time of the institution of bankruptcy proceedings and it is not necessarily his duty in such matters to follow the wishes of a majority in number and amount of the creditors, but when his own judgment concurs with that of a great majority of all the creditors, to the effect that the defense of such suit would probably be unsuccessful, delay the settlement of the estate and result in considerable expense, such judgment should control.¹²⁴ One option is with the trustee—he may or may not decide to defend¹²⁵—though, when Reinstatement of case.—Where proceedings in a State court have been stayed until the determination of the right of a defendant to a discharge and such a defendant has failed to obtain its discharge and the time has elapsed precluding it from obtaining the same, the plaintiff is entitled by proper motion and notice to have an order setting aside the order staying the proceeding and to have the case reinstated for trial. *Clark v. When there is a fair chance of success in the pending litigation, and its prosecution to judgment would benefit the estate by preventing the taking away of money or property, or by way of the establishment of some important fact or question of law necessary to the efficient administration of the estate, and the amount involved directly or indirectly is substantially more than the probable cost of the litigation, it would be the plain duty of the trustee to defend or prosecute as the case may be. In re Kearney Bros. (D. C., N. Y.), 25 Am. B. R. 757, 184 Fed. 190, quoting Collier on Bankruptcy (7th ed.), 221.

The trustee should intervene in a suit which is pending against the bankrupt at the time of his adjudication, as such, if the property of the bankrupt is at that time in the hands of a receiver appointed by a in doubt, he should report at a meeting of creditors for instructions. If he decides to intervene in a pending suit he should secure the approval of the Federal court.¹²⁶ The other option is with the court; it may,¹²⁷ but need not, order the trustee to intervene. Where the suit affects the bankrupt estate and its determination, if adverse to the bankrupt, may deplete the assets, the trustee may properly be ordered to intervene;¹²⁸ and a court of bankruptcy may restrain an action in a State court for such time as will permit the trustee to prepare his papers and make a motion for an order allowing him to intervene.¹²⁹ The State court may not compel a trustee to intervene;¹³⁰ but a plaintiff may be entitled to have a trustee made a party defendant, although he cannot be compelled to answer unless by direction of the bankruptcy court.¹³¹ He can plead to the jurisdiction, or make any defense which the bankrupt could have made, or even any defense which any creditor could have asserted affirmatively.¹³² Once the trustee is a party to such suit, he is bound by the judgment therein,¹³³ but he does not voluntarily submit himself to the jurisdiction of the State court by protesting against its exercise of jurisdiction in an action.¹³⁴ If the judgment is already entered, and the State court refuses to open it on a motion of the trustee, the court of bankruptcy cannot, it seems, force the State court to open the case by restraining the enforcement of its judgment.¹³⁵ It would also seem that a trustee, when once a party, could, on showing the required facts, secure a removal of the cause to the proper Federal court; there are, however, no cases in point. If a trustee does not intervene, he is bound by the judgment to the same extent that any party acquiring an interest pending suit would be bound.¹³⁶ A trustee may not oust the jurisdiction of a State court by pointing out the pendency of the bankruptcy proceedings.¹³⁷ Where a trustee intervenes, he incurs no liability against the estate for costs which accrued before his intervention, and he is in no event personally liable for the costs if his intervention was in good faith.¹³⁸ The right of a trustee to intervene in a cause pending in a State court against the bankrupt is to be heard and determined under the practice and rules of the State court.¹³⁹

b. Where bankrupt is plaintiff.—Subsection c of this section permits the trustee, with the approval of the court, to prosecute as trustee any suit commenced by the bankrupt prior to the adjudication, with like force and effect as though it had been commenced by him.¹⁴⁰ The words of this subsection are strikingly similar to those of the law of 1867.¹⁴¹ They have, however, been given a somewhat limited meaning. Thus, only such suits as may be beneficial to the estate should be continued by the trustee.¹⁴² If, then, actions not beneficial to the estate are pending, what may the bankrupt do? The authorities are not uniform.¹⁴³ The analogy between such a right of action and any other valueless or burdensome property is striking, and, it is thought, on proper application to the referee in charge, the trustee may be excused from prosecuting such a suit, and the bankrupt authorized to do so for his own benefit.¹⁴⁴ The consent of the bankruptcy court to the substitution of the trustee for the bankrupt in the State court should first be obtained and affirmatively shown.¹⁴⁵ The court whose approval is required is that which appointed the trustee.¹⁴⁶ A cause of action for damages arising out of a personal wrong suffered by the bankrupt does not pass to his trustee in bankruptcy and the trustee should not be permitted to continue the action, since this subsection only relates to actions that are a part of the bankrupt's estate, or in which his estate has an interest.¹⁴⁷ The statute is silent as to the right of the bankrupt to begin a suit in the time which intervenes between the filing of the petition and the election of a trustee; but the Supreme Court has held that the bankrupt's title to the property which

144. Effect of failure of trustee to prosecute.—In the case of Griffin v. Mutual Life Insurance Co., 119 Ga. 663, 11 Am. B. R. 622, 46 S. E. 870, it was held that if no trustee is appointed, or if the bankruptcy court does not consider it to the interest of the estate to permit the trustee to prosecute the suit the action does not abate nor is the bankrupt's debtor discharged from liability in the pending action; the bankrupt may have an interest in the recovery which he is entitled to protect.

An action by or against the bankrupt in the State court does not abate upon the adjudication in bankruptcy or appointment of a trustee, and in the absence of an application by the trustee for substitution it may be prosecuted or defended by the bankrupt. Hahlo v. Cohn, 112 N. Y. App. Div. 636, 15 Am. B. R. 591, 98 N. Y. Supp. 1049.

147. Libel.—Under section 70-a(6) of the bankruptcy act, a trustee in bankruptcy cannot be substituted as plaintiff and continue the prosecution of a suit to recover damages for libel, which had been commenced by bankrupt prior to bankruptcy, although the injuries to the bankrupt from such libel may have been the cause of his bankruptcy. Epstein v. Hardwecker (Sup. Ct., Okl.), 29 Okl. 337, 26 Am. B. R. 712, 116 Fed. Pac. 789.

Malicious prosecution.—An action for malicious prosecution, if commenced before the adjudication of the insolvent debtor in bankruptcy, is not one which the trustee may continue with consent of the court of bankruptcy. In re Haensell (D. C., Cal.), 1 Am. B. R. 286, 91 Fed. 355.

will pass to the trustee, is sufficient to authorize the trustee to bring a suit for damages to such property.¹⁴⁸ If the trustee intervenes, the suit will be continued in his name;¹⁴⁹ but the trustee is liable only for costs after he intervenes, and for costs personally only when guilty of mismanagement or bad faith.¹⁵⁰

c. Practice.—The order to intervene and the consent to defend should be granted upon application made by petition or motion. This application, as a rule, may be heard at a meeting of creditors. It may, however, be granted ex parte. In some districts the practice is to grant the consent in the form of an order authorizing the trustee to apply to the proper State court for substitution.¹⁵¹ How far an adverse party in the State court should be heard in opposition to the motion is an open question. He certainly should not, if he is not a creditor, and any effort on his part summarily to determine the controversy on the merits should be checked; the State court is the forum for such determination. Permission once granted, the scene shifts to the State court, and the application there will, of course, be in accordance with the rules and practice of that court.¹⁵² Throughout, the practice under these subsections is closely analogous to that where a trustee initiates a suit, discussed under the appropriate sections, post.¹⁵³

a. Effect of limitation.—Subsection d provides that "Suits shall not be brought by or against a trustee of a bankrupt estate subsequent to two years after the estate has been closed." It has reference to suits initiated by the trustee, rather than those pending at the time of the bankruptcy.¹⁵⁴ It is similar to the corresponding clause under the act of 1867 in period only. It constitutes an arbitrary limitation on all suits; as to computation of time at least superseding all statutes whether State or Federal,¹⁵⁵ provided the action

Supp. 503, it was held that the trustee would not be substituted as plaintiff in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien so far as his liability for costs was concerned, it appearing that the only purpose of such substitution was to avoid payment of a judgment properly obtained, the defendant no longer having opportunity to demand security for costs.

Action by trustee to recover stock subscriptions.—Before a trustee in bankruptcy, substituted as plaintiff in an action commenced by the receiver of an insolvent corporation prior to its bankruptcy to recover unpaid stock subscriptions, can continue such action it is necessary that the defendant have notice and an opportunity to be heard upon the validity of the alleged debts of the corporation, and that an order be entered directing proceedings against the stockholders where subscriptions are unpaid for such amount as, together with the assets, will be sufficient to meet the liabilities of the corporation. Where the pleadings fail to allege such facts, they do not state a cause of action. Chamberlain v. Piercy (Sup. Ct., Wash.), 82 Wash. 157, 33 Am. B. R. 554, 143 Pac. 977.

155. Effect of bankruptcy act on statute of limitations.—In Freelander v. Holloman, Fed. Cas. 5,081, also reported in 9 N. B. R. 331, the question of the application of the statute of limitation was considered by the court. It is there said: "The Constitution of the United States conferred upon Congress the power to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States; and when Congress, in pursuance of this power, passed the Bankrupt Act, it at once superseded all laws in conflict with it. The bankrupt's estate and every thing and right connected with it, upon the bankruptcy, at is not barred by the State statute at the time the petition in bankruptcy was filed.¹⁵⁶ It seems also that the character of the suit is immaterial, provided it amounts to the prosecution of a demand in a court of justice,¹⁵⁷ in respect to the property or rights of property of the bankrupt.¹⁵⁸ It applies also to writs of error sued out to review a judgment of a State court, as well as to suits initiated by the trustee.¹⁵⁹ It does not apply to an application to reopen a case upon the ground that the proceeding was closed before the estate was fully administered.¹⁶⁰ Under familiar principles, this limitation does not affect jurisdiction; to be available, it must be pleaded.¹⁶¹

b. When limitation begins to run; when estate is closed.—Under the present law the two-year limitation begins to run on and after the estate has been closed; under the act of 1867, the time began to run when the cause of action accrued in favor of or against the assignee.¹⁶² The phrase “after the estate has been closed” does not mean the date of the discharge or refusal to discharge; nor does it mean the date the referee remits the papers of a closed case to the clerk.¹⁶³ It rather refers to the date when the final decree approving the trustee's account and discharging him is granted.¹⁶⁴ Even this is, however, not accurate, for in no asset bankruptcies no trustee may be appointed and once passed under the control and operation of the bankrupt law. After that the rights of those in interest may be contracted or enlarged, as Congress in its wisdom may provide. This provision, in the second section, provides that all rights of action barred upon the appointment of the assignee shall remain barred, whether in favor of or against the assignee, and give both to the assignee and those claiming an adverse interest to any property claimed by the assignee in the adverse possession of others, or claimed by others, to property in the hands or under the control of the assignee, two years in which to commence proceedings in equity or at law for its recovery. This is a separate and independent provision, and has no connection with any State statute on the subject. It may extend or may contract the time provided in the statute of limitations. Thus, if at the time of the appointment of the assignee but a few days remained of the time necessary to complete the bar, the time would be extended; or, if the statute had just commenced running, and under the State law would have ten years to run, as in case of actions of ejectment to recover real estate, it would be complete within two years.”

The limitation applies to suits for the recovery of preferences under § 60-b, exclusive of a State statute prescribing a different limitation. Arnold Grocery Co. v. Shackelford (Ga. Sup. Ct.), 140 Ga. 585, 31 Am. B. R. 119, 79 S. E. 470.

160. An application to reopen a case, upon the ground that the proceedings were closed before the estate was fully administered, is not a “suit” within the meaning of section 11-d. A former trustee has no standing in court to seek the reopening of a bankruptcy proceeding. None but creditors who have proved their claims are entitled to that relief. Matter of Paine (D. C., Ky.), 11 Am. B. R. 351, 127 Fed. 246.

162. When limitation begins to run.—Where during the pendency of bankruptcy proceedings the trustee had, or might readily have had, knowledge that bankrupt had made a preferential transfer of property, and it appeared that the only reason that inquiries concerning the same were not prosecuted further was that, as there were mortgages on the property, further prosecution was deemed not worth while, the trustee cannot claim in a suit begun more than two years after the estate was closed, that the fraud had only been discovered about a month before the commencement of the suit, so as to have prevented the limitation of two years, contained in section 11-a of the bankruptcy act from having expired. Kinder v. Scharf (Sup. Ct., La.), 129 La. 218, 26 Am. B. R. 765, 55 So. 769.

In an action by a trustee in bankruptcy to compel a stockholder of the bankrupt to pay an assessment upon stock of the bankrupt held by him in compliance with an order of the referee, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the order of the referee. Journey v. Youngs (Miss. Sup. Ct.), 42 Am. B. R. 67, 168 N. W. 441.

When estate deemed “closed.”—Where the final account of a trustee in bankruptcy has been proved, the trustee discharged and all the funds of the estate distributed, the estate yet a cause of action may develop; while in many cases when a trustee is appointed he finds himself unable to find assets and, there being no funds with which to pay the expenses incident to a meeting for his discharge, files no report and is not discharged. There are as yet no decisions construing the meaning of this phrase. It is suggested that, where no trustee is appointed, the two years will begin to run from the day when the order dispensing with a trustee is granted, and that, when a trustee is appointed who does not report or seek a final discharge, it will not begin until such discharge is granted. It has been held that where an estate is declared closed, but is subsequently reopened, the two-year period begins to run from the subsequent closing of the estate.¹⁶⁵ Failure to commence the action within the required time because of inability to serve process is no excuse.¹⁶⁶ will be deemed "closed" within the meaning of § 11-d and § 2(8) of the bankruptcy act, and the trustee after the reopening of the estate and his reappointment cannot assert, in a suit brought to set aside as preferential a conveyance made by bankrupt within the four months' period, that the estate had not been "fully administered," because the property sued for had not been included in the administration, as such property, although fraudulently conveyed, would form no part of the estate until the conveyance had been set aside. Kinder v. Scharff (Sup. Ct., La.), 129 La. 218, 26 Am. B. R. 765, 55 So. 769.

SECTION TWELVE.

COMPOSITIONS, WHEN CONFIRMED.

§ 12. Compositions, When Confirmed.—a A bankrupt may offer, either before or after adjudication, terms of composition to his creditors, but not before, he has been examined in open court or at a meeting of his creditors, and has filed in court the schedule of his property and list of his creditors, required to be filed by bankrupts. *In compositions before adjudication the bankrupt shall file the required schedules, and thereupon the court shall call a meeting of creditors for the allowance of claims, examination of the bankrupt, and preservation of conduct of estates, at which meeting the judge or referee shall preside; and action upon the petition for adjudication shall be delayed until it shall be determined whether such composition shall be confirmed.

b An application for the confirmation of a composition may be filed in the court of bankruptcy after, but not before, it has been accepted in writing by a majority in number of all creditors whose claims have been allowed, which number must represent a majority in amount of such claims, and the consideration to be paid by the bankrupt to his creditors, and the money necessary to pay all debts which have priority and the cost of the proceedings, have been deposited in such place as shall be designated by and subject to the order of the judge.

c A date and place, with reference to the convenience of the parties in interest, shall be fixed for the hearing upon each application for the confirmation of a composition, and such objections as may be made to its confirmation.

d The judge shall confirm a composition if satisfied that (1) it is for the best interests of the creditors; (2) the bankrupt has not been guilty of any of the acts or failed to perform any of the duties which would be a bar to his discharge; and (3) the offer and its acceptance are in good faith and have not been made or procured except as herein provided, or by any means, promises, or acts herein forbidden.

e Upon the confirmation of a composition, the consideration shall be distributed as the judge shall direct, and the case dismissed. Whenever a composition is not confirmed, the estate shall be administered in bankruptcy as herein provided.

a. The English and Canadian systems.—Not until 1825, was a composition with creditors permitted in England, nor did this first statute discharge the debts of dissentient creditors. The act of 1849, which required the bankrupt to make a cessio bonorum, provided for a discharge available against all creditors whether consenting or not. The act of 1869, § 126, is concededly the progenitor of our system of composition. Since then, two statutes have been passed in England, that of 1883 and that of 1890. The latter repeals the former's provisions concerning compositions, and is now the law. By it, in connection with § 23 of the act of 1883, a scheme of composition may be offered either between the entry of the receiving order (petition) and the adjudication, or after that date. When the offer is after that date, the practice seems not unlike our own; but a composition outside of, i. e., before an actual bankruptcy, is not possible under our law.¹ The English statutes also provide for "deeds of arrangement" with creditors, a procedure something like those of our State insolvency laws that require the assent of creditors in advance.² In actual practice, these deeds of arrangement are more general than compositions proper.³ In England schemes of arrangement as distinguished from compositions are possible even after bankruptcy proceedings are commenced. The Canadian statute is similar in its provisions to our own although more elaborate.^{3a}

b. Continental systems.—The laws of the continental countries distinguish between compositions without the relinquishment of assets, and compositions with relinquishment. The first class differs from the English method in that it cannot take place until after a bankruptcy proceeding has been begun, and results in a part payment and the creation of a "debt of honor" for the balance, the bankrupt being restored to his business, but compelled to perform the terms of his composition agreement. In effect, this is merely an extension, but, when consented to by certain percentages of the creditors, is binding on all. It is, on the Continent, decidedly the more general and more popular method. The other kind of composition resembles that in vogue here, but seems to be possible only in France and Greece. Besides, some countries permit an arrangement with creditors before bankruptcy, to prevent or avoid bankruptcy, and, therefore, properly called "preventive compositions." These correspond to the English deeds of arrangement, either in or out of the proceeding proper, if made before the actual adjudication.⁴ The modern tendency is toward arrangements or compositions between the creditor and debtor, as distinguished from the harsher rules of the older bankruptcy laws. The section now under discussion will, therefore, become increasingly important as the years go on.

c. Compositions under act of 1867 as amended in 1874.⁵—Our first and second bankruptcy laws did not provide for compositions. Nor did the law of 1867, until amended by the act of June 22, 1874.⁶ The corresponding section of the present law is not only more terse, but, in effect, in several particulars unlike that of the law of 1874. The latter, and the adjudicated cases under it, are, therefore, not always in point. Its main features should, however, be understood and will be briefly outlined here, the foot-notes indicating the leading cases. The discussion of the present section, post, is confined, as far as possible,

1. Compare § 23, Eng. Act of Bankruptcy, 1883, with § 3, Act of 1890.

2. See N. Y. Debtor and Creditor Law, §§ 50-86.

3. See Eng. Deeds of Arrangement Acts of 1887 and 1890. The popularity of deeds of arrangement in England is, from our point of view, difficult to understand. Our insolvency laws, requiring in advance the assent of creditors, are practically dead letters.

4. The writer is greatly indebted in this connection to "Bankruptcy, a Study in Comparative Legislation," by S. Whitney Dunscomb, Jr., Esq., of the New York Bar; being No. 2, Vol. II, of the Columbia College Studies in History, Economics, and Public Law.

to the meaning of the words of the statute, whether or not already interpreted by the courts. Under the act of 1874, a composition could be offered in a pending proceeding either before or after the adjudication.⁷ If offered, a meeting of creditors was called,⁸ at which the debtor was obliged to be present and answer all inquiries made of him, and also to produce a statement of assets and liabilities with the names and addresses of his creditors.⁹ At such meeting, a resolution accepting the proposed composition became operative if passed by a majority in number and three-fourths in amount of creditors present or represented,¹⁰ and binding if confirmed by the signatures of the debtor and two-thirds in number and one-half in value of all his creditors.¹¹ Creditors on fifty dollars or less were counted as to amount but not as to number;¹² and secured creditors were not counted unless they relinquished their security.¹³ The resolution, if thus operative and confirmed, with a statement of assets and liabilities,¹⁴ was submitted to the judge, who thereupon calling a meeting of creditors,¹⁵ and, if (a) satisfied that the resolution was lawfully passed,¹⁶ and (b) that it was for the best interests¹⁷ of all concerned, caused it to be recorded. A composition once agreed to could be varied by a similar procedure.¹⁸ Compositions provided for the pro rata satisfaction in money of all debts not secured or entitled to priority.¹⁹ When accepted, they were binding on all creditors scheduled in the statement produced by the debtor at the meeting at which the resolution was passed,²⁰ and could be enforced by the court summarily or by contempt proceedings.²¹ If a composition was not ordered, or, when ordered, could not be carried out, the bankruptcy proceeding went on.²²

II. COMPOSITIONS UNDER THE PRESENT LAW.

a. In general.—The more important changes made by the present law are discussed later. A few of them are: (1) the composition, when offered after adjudication, cannot be offered until the bankrupt has filed his schedules and been examined, and the proposed terms have been accepted in writing by a
